Will and Effort There is a good deal of false teaching about will-power. Here we give the truth, arising out of twenty years' reflection and experience. Pelmanism helps put a man in control of himself. It believes control should come early in the course. This is a lesson which "shows you how"—there is no irritating theory to bother you.

Concentration Can you focus your attention on anything, when you like, as long as you like, and in spite of surrounding distractions? If not, study this lesson. It places the whole subject in a new light. All the great leaders of men have been able to concentrate at will. And concentration enables you to see more and further than the other fellow.

Mental Connection Scores of students have said this is the best lesson of the course. Why? Because it teaches the art of thinking in a connected manner. So many persons follow the "anyhow" style, their thoughts are a tangled mass—like the string-bag. This lesson introduces science and order into your mental operations. It aims to give you that kind of precise and exact thought which you notice in big men.

Imagination and Originality Many Pelmanists enroll to get this lesson because the subject appealed to them. It appeals to all progressive men and women. But it is only a part of Pelmanism, not the whole. Still it is a vital part, and Pelmanists everywhere swear by it. Its methods, duly carried out, have brought wealth and happiness to thousands.

The Pursuit of Truth Everybody is seeking the truth about something. The detective seeks it; the inventor seeks it; the trader, the theologian, the financier, the lawyer and the judge, are all of them trying to discover the real facts. How is it done? By following the right methods. We give them in this lesson, along with further hints on the principles of connection.

On Personality There is no country in the world where personality is more deeply considered than in America. In this lesson there is a new treatment of the subject; the aim is to bring out the unconscious element in character, both mental and moral. An attractive personality has powers, both financial and social, which know no standard of measurement.

How to Organize Your Mental Life A Pelmanist is a realist first. If he has to earn an income he believes in earning an increasing income. Nevertheless, he is not a "Scrooge." Society calls him. He must be able to discuss ideals as well as talk figures. There must be nothing narrow about him. Idealism has its claims, and in this lesson we show how to keep in touch with the more reflective side of life. A Pelmanist's resources are not all in the bank; he carries some of them himself.

Your Subconscious Mind Our minds may be likened to icebergs, which, when floating in the ocean, show only a small portion of their mass above the water's level. The great bulk is below—out of sight. Our consciousness is but a part of our mental life. Deep down is the life which we call subconscious or unconscious, and its immense importance is now being realized. It is as important to you as to the professional student of psychology.

Pelmanism in Action In the pages of the last lesson we give a resume and an application of the principles previously expounded. We do this in no formal or perfunctory manner. There is a punch in our questions, but it is always friendly. Moreover, the last work-sheet is longer and fuller than any of the others. It is a kind of hand-shake at the conclusion of the course, and we have in consequence more to say to each other. We do not want you to miss any of the points contained in Lesson I to XI, and we are anxious to see you firmly established on the new foundations. Therefore, when you have covered the ground of the whole course, and realized it in its unity, the work-sheet questions will help make Pelmanism a living element in your personality.

SPIES OLD AND NEW

War Taught a New Technique of Detection, as Told in "The Army Behind the Army"

WHEN Mme. Marie K. de Victorica, daughter of the Prussian General to whom Marshal Bazaine handed his sword in 1870 at the surrender of Metz, set out from the Wilhelmstrasse to conduct an espionage campaign in America during the recent war, two silk mufflers were an important part of her equipment.

Of her equipment, not of her wardrobe!

For the mufflers were impregnated with a secret ink chemical, so that when she saturated them in water and wrung them out she obtained the needed "invisible" fluid for her code messages to Germany. By dissolving in vinegar iodine tablets manufactured by British chemists, secret agents in Berlin set up the necessary reaction to make the writing visible.

Mme. de Victorica, you perceive, was an old-fashioned spy, a product and tool of Old World diplomacy and duplicity. So-called invisible ink is one of the oldest tricks of the trade. A close mouth is one of the personal requirements, too, and however well the Madame may have been provided with silk mufflers, she was woefully deficient in a vocal muffler. She talked too much, and in consequence of her indiscreet boasting on the steamship which bore her to this country a watch was set on her which balked most of her spying and ultimately brought arrest.

The modern spy, as evolved from the world war, differed as widely from Mme. de Victorica and her secret ink as the Woolworth Building differs from the Pyramids, to which time secret ink probably belongs. He used a code, to be sure, but it was the kind of code which would have robbed Edgar Allan Poe of a picturesque part of his reputation, had it been in use in his day, for it was transmitted, not by ink but by electricity, and it was so ingenious that even the operator sending the message could not possibly decipher it.

That statement is made on the authority of Major E. Alexander Powell, who is entitled to write an imposing string of letters after his name, but who uses his military title in signing his latest book, "The Army Behind the Army," about to be published by Charles Scribner's Sons. He takes a casual and somewhat contemptuous glance at Mme. de Victorica and her ink, for he is much more interested in the unassuming and undisguised modern detective-spy, partly because when he entered the war he was one of the four officers in the Military Intelligence Division, (the army Secret Service,) and he cheats the still existent censorship to the extent of telling some new facts about its work.

Mme. de Victorica, it may be said in passing, was a kinswoman of the Kaiserin, and had received a high education in German universities. She spoke four languages, had worked as a German spy and propagandist in South America and other countries, and had been thrice married. Her last husband was a South American, who died suddenly soon after the marriage. Her first husband was Professor Otto Eckmann of Heidelberg University. Her German title was the Baroness Maria Kretschmann. She used various aliases, among them Mlle. Marie de Vuisiere and Frau Maria Kretschmann. Most of these facts Major Powell either ignored or they were stricken out by the censor.

Perhaps no revelation Major Powell makes is more interesting than that about the secret code devices. "I am not permitting myself to indulge in the slightest exaggeration," he writes, "when I assert that these devices place in the hands of the United States weapons which would render this country well-nigh invulnerable in the event of our ever becoming involved in another war." And later he adds that "as universal peace is not yet in sight, even with the aid of a telescope, and as this invention would prove of incalculable benefit to the United States in the event of our becoming again involved in war, it is obviously out of the question to discuss the principle on which it is based, much less the details of its construction and operation. It is enough to say that this nation is now the possessor of a system of code transmission which can defy all the experts in the world, a message sent by its means being absolutely undecipherable to the inventor himself."

Possibly there is a clue to the secret in Major Powell's description of another invention, unsuccessfully tried out before the successful device was found by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. He says:

Another system had as its basic principle the breaking up of the groups of Morse dots and dashes which represented the letters of the message, and routing these mangled fragments over widely separated wires to the receiving station, where they were automatically joined together again, so as to form the message as originally sent. If, for example, it was desired to send from Hoboken to Washington the message, "Transport Leviathan sails June 25th," it was proposed to make use of two lines, one running, let us say, through Harrisburg, the other via Wilmington. The message sent over the Harrisburg wire would be broken up something after this fashion: "t-a-s-o-t-e-i-t-a-s-l-s-u-s-w-n-y-l-t." While the portion going by way of Wilmington would read: "r-n-p-r-l-v-a-n-n-a-l-j-n-t-e-t-f-l-h."

To create still further confusion in the mind of any one who might succeed in intercepting one of these sets of fragments, it was proposed to superimpose a "camouflage" message upon the disconnected letters, the characters of the camouflage message to occupy the spaces between the characters of the real message. By an exceedingly ingenious device these apparently inextricably intermixed and unrelated letters were automatically sorted out at the receiving station and pieced together, like a jigsaw puzzle, so that the message appeared precisely as it was sent.

Going a step further, the inventors of this system proposed by the same means to install a system of telephone communication whereby the spoken words would be broken up just as the Morse characters were divided, certain sounds in each word going over one wire and the remaining sounds over another, to be joined together at the receiving station into a perfectly intelligible conversation.

Here again a wholly separate and extraneous conversation was superimposed over the sounds proceeding by each route, so that were either of the lines tapped the listener-in would be rewarded for his pains by hearing a torrent of sound which would convince him that he was listening to a combination of Choctaw, Chinese, the ravings of John McCullough, and the symptoms of a severe cold. Notwithstanding the undeniable ingenuity of this system, the Signal Corps experts demonstrated, to the unconcealed astonishment of the inventors, that they could overhear and understand these crazy-quilt conversations as readily as though they were being held across a dinner table in plain English.

The successful device (which may, of course, use none of the principles involved in the system just outlined) is one of three evolved by Yankee ingenuity from the war, which Major Powell regards as "the most important inventions, so far as their effect on the peaceful interests of the nation are concerned, which have been produced since Morse invented the telegraph. Bell perfected the telephone, and Marconi amazed us with the wireless." One of them is the radio telephone, by means of which persons on the ground can converse with aviators; and the other is the discovery of Chief Signal Officer Squire that growing trees can be used as sending and receiving poles for radio messages, thus doing away with the necessity for tall and costly towers. About these latter devices the public has been told.

Major Powell's book is devoted in the main to the Meuse-Argonne with the Silver Chevrons. He wrote it at the request of Secretary Baker, and was retained in the service to complete it. Readers may be sure, therefore, that he had access to all necessary records; but there are moments when this heavy hand of a department head becomes apparent.

In spite of that, he writes as one "on the inside." He tells of the eighteen telephone and telegraph battalions recruited in large measure from the ranks of the two great telephone companies in this country (which may explain why it has been so hard to get "central.") These he calls "the ears of the army," but at times they also were its spies. He tells of the engineers, the Quartermaster and Ordnance Departments, the aviators, the Tank Corps, the Motor Transport Corps, the Medical Department, and of course Military Intelligence. He says, incidentally, that not one spy was shot here during the war.

It is Major Powell's contention that the Motor Transport had its beginning when Pershing went into Mexico after Villa; and at one place he throws this interesting, side light on the submarine raids along the Atlantic Coast:

And, apropos of rolling stock, here is a bit of secret history hitherto unpublished. When Villa's raiders were threatening to destroy the railway lines paralleling the Mexican border the Engineering Corps designed and built a number of self-propelling armored railway cars armed with three-inch rifles, machine guns, and searchlights. When the German submarines began their piratical operations along the Atlantic seaboard in the Spring of 1918 these moving fortresses were secretly rushed up from the Rio Grande in order to afford protection to the undefended Jersey coast towns. It was well for the U-boat commanders that they did not attempt to shell Long Branch and Atlantic City as they shelled Scarborough and Broadstairs. If they had, the engineers and their armored cars would have given them the surprise of their lives.

America's effort in felling forests in France, building railroads there, producing superpoison gas, and so on, is more than a twice-told tale. Major Powell tells it with an interest as fresh as though he approached it for the first time, and frequently produces facts not hitherto known. This article is not an attempt to summarize all the new things he has had to say; it is, on the contrary, a poor foreshortening. The book is not indexed, and so has little value for reference purposes; but as a rapid and inspiring survey of the men back of the fighters it offers opportunity for some interesting hours to those still interested in the war.

RELICS OF THE REVOLUTION

Historical Society Unearths Rich Store at Fort Hill Site on Staten Island

THE Field Exploration Committee of the New York Historical Society has unearthed a large number of Revolutionary War relics at old Fort Hill, at Richmond, S. I.

The committee has been exploring the site of the fort quietly during the greater part of the Summer, fearing that public announcement of the work would attract to the spot sightseers who would have interfered.

The British landed troops on Staten Island in August, 1776, and occupied the island until the war ended. They found that the island, because of its isolated position, was an ideal place to land and shelter their troops. A navigable stream runs from the bay through the town of Richmond, and as a defense the British built Fort Hill. The ramparts and other parts of the old fortification, which was built on a hill, are still standing.

The committee found that in exploiting the fort they had set themselves no easy task. It is in a particularly wild spot, which has been overgrown with dense vegetation. The relic hunters found every foot of their progress opposed by coarse, unyielding weeds, and roots of trees which had stretched out into the soft, rich soil of the fort. Many hours of hard and patient toil were required to uproot and clear away the mass of underbrush. When it was at last removed, the lines and contour of the old fort stood clearly revealed.

William L. Calver, Chairman of the committee, found the camp rubbish pits in which relics are generally found, and about four feet or less below the surface on the south side of the fortification various souvenirs of the British occupation were brought to light. After weeks of exploring and digging, the relic hunters unearthed a mass of fragmentary iron and brass, barrel hoops, rings, cooking utensils, locks, shoe and belt buckles, belt straps, bronze buckles, parts of bayonets and old muskets, many bullets and buttons of soldiery. Buried in the camp rubbish heaps were thousands of clam and oyster shells, and a great quantity of meat bones, particularly bones of the pig.

Buttons Reveal Large Garrison.

The most important find probably was the buttons of the soldiery. It is by the buttons that the identity of regiments and commands quartered there is established. Buttons of as many as twenty different regiments were found, and this to the mind of Reginald Pelham Bolton, a relic hunter of twenty years' experience, indicated that the number of British occupying Staten Island was larger than generally had been supposed.

"By the investigation," Mr. Bolton said, "the committee has established that the British occupation of Staten Island was much larger than generally had been believed. The main encampment was doubtless at Richmond. The number of buttons of different British regiments would seem to indicate that from 5,000 to 6,000 troops were quartered at a time on the island. In those days that was a lot of men.

"During the Revolution a British regiment numbered approximately 600 men. The British used the island probably as a depot, training camp, and concentration point for troops. They could not have selected a better place for their operations than Staten Island, and Richmond was ideal for an encampment, since it provided good drinking water, shade, and other advantages."

The great mass of clam and oyster shells and meat bones indicated to Mr. Bolton that the British did not fare badly as to food. The waters about the island evidently provided them abundantly with fish. The rich vegetation was ideal for raising and keeping cattle, and from the great number of pig bones unearthed it appears that they did not lack pork.

No Trace of Barracks.

Search for the quaint huts occupied by the invaders thus far has brought none to light. It does not seem probable the soldiers could have made their homes in tents the year round. It is believed that when they evacuated the island they either destroyed their huts or barracks, or that evidence of them has been eradicated by time.

The committee first focused its attention on this encampment two years ago. At that time Mr. Calver made several visits to Fort Hill and observed the topography of the land. He was followed by Mr. Bolton, who made several scientific surveys of the place. No serious attempt to look for relics was made until about a year ago.

The relics found are being classified and arranged for exhibition at the rooms of the New York Historical Society. They will remain a permanent part of the society's collection of Revolutionary War relics, since the Jumel Mansion and Dyckman House are already well filled with such souvenirs.

Mr. Bolton and Mr. Calver have spent twenty years hunting such relics. Mr. Calver, his companions say, has a canny way of locating their hiding place. This he does with a steel rod. By running it into the ground, he can tell with remarkable accuracy when it comes in contact with something hard whether it is such treasure as he is looking for.

The committee does its own digging and excavating, much of it with small and delicate tools. It will continue its work on Staten Island as long as relics are brought to light.

New Use for Automobile.

A resident of New Marlboro, Mass., has found a new use for the automobile. Being troubled by numerous woodchucks, he attached a hose to the exhaust pipe of his motor car and proceeded to gas the animals, which fled or died.—Utica Herald-Dispatch.

ANCIENT WIRELESS SIGNALING

WIRELESS telegraphy is new; wireless communication is as old as Biblical times."

With this statement the National Geographic Society quotes from a communication by John A. Kingman, who sets forth the interesting theory that the island of Capri was an imperial wireless station of ancient Rome.

"We know that the ancients signaled in various ways over long distances," he says. "They signaled by beacon fires, by beacon smoke, by pigeons, by flags, and by shouting from one sentinel to another.

"Lighthouses are as old as the earliest chapters of the Bible. Beacon fires and beacon smoke were commonly used by the early Greeks, and there was no reason why the more practical Roman should not have employed improved methods, such as heliographing.

"We do know that at the siege of Syracuse by Marcellus mirrors were employed by Archimedes; and * * * we can appreciate the blinding effect of many mirrors on the eyes of the navigators of the attacking vessels. That is what probably happened during that conflict. At any rate, it shows that the great Archimedes, at least, had found some use for mirrors other than the usual one.

"Signaling was certainly a common military practice among the ancients, and ancient writers, such as Virgil, Aeschylus, and Herodotus, frequently alluded to it.

"An interesting case of long-distance signaling by relaying is mentioned by Herodotus, in which it appears that certain tidings were sent to Xerxes in Asia by means of a line of beacon fires arranged through the Greek Islands.

"The ancients went further than simply announcing some prearranged message; they had codes and sent long messages. The Greeks signaled on one occasion 100 miles at one jump. This was from Mt. Chigri, 1,698 feet, to Mt. Athos, 6,500 feet.

"The reasonableness of the Capri 'wireless' station theory tempts one to speculate as to how much signaling was done and how it was done. It will be remembered that Tiberius, the unpopular successor of Augustus, spent eleven years of his reign on Capri, and without coming to Rome, directed most successfully the affairs of the vast empire. He even foiled the conspiracy of his trusted minister, Sejanus, who was supposed to have general charge of affairs after Tiberius retired to the island.

"Though Tiberius went to Capri an old man, he was the actual ruler—Emperor, in fact—and his heavy hand was felt all over the empire until the very end. With regular news bulletins and reports, received daily if need be, containing confidential information, he would be able to issue instructions and manage affairs as thoroughly as if he were in Rome.

"Possibly the Publica Acta (Senate Journal) and the Diurna Acta (authorized news) were sent to Capri by signal instead of by messenger. We can conceive that such a system, organized most likely under Augustus, must have operated smoothly after some years of experience and practice. I hazard the theory of mirrors because of its simplicity and convincing character. Signaling by beacon seems too primitive for the wonderful civilization of the empire. Of course, at night time beacon fires would have to be employed; mirror signaling was a fair-weather method.

"The distance in an air line between Rome and Capri is 130 miles—too long for direct signaling; but if we look along the coast of the Tyrrhenian Sea we find numerous mountains affording points where the signals could be relayed. The frequency of the relaying would depend on the conditions. The highest point on Capri is Monte Solaro, 1,980 feet. Signals were probably not sent from here, but from the eastern headland. The Pharos was about 1,000 feet above sea level. A line drawn from the Pharos to Monte Circeo, on the Campanian coast, just grazes the island of Ischia; but the line of sight would be well above the island, as the summit of Circeo is 1,775 feet.

"A suggested line of stations with no range more than 44 miles long is submitted to those of a speculative turn of mind. Rome to Monte Cavo, in the Alban Mountains, 18 miles; thence to Monte Circeo, 39 miles; thence to Monte Massico, 44 miles; thence to Capri, 44 miles. A Pompeiian fresco of quite recent discovery shows Monte Cavo as being very conspicuous when viewed from the Palatine Hill. The clear summit is boldly visible. Perhaps the Palatine Hill was the 'sending' station in Rome."

The wise old boys that wait on trade at Goldburg's honeymoon stores never make three a crowd when showing and advising housekeeping beginners how to start right. They know how to make the transaction positively enjoyable from the picking out to the making of terms.

President Wilson will soon proclaim throughout the land that Thanksgiving Day is near at hand. A good many young couples will be thankful that they never in all their lives will have to replace the furniture they have selected at Goldburg's. And it's so with the old folks, too.

How I Improved My Memory In One Evening

The Amazing Experience of Victor Jones

"Of course I place you! Mr. Addison Sims of Seattle.

"If I remember correctly—and I do remember correctly—Mr. Burroughs, the lumberman, introduced me to you at the luncheon of the Seattle Rotary Club three years ago in May. This is a pleasure, indeed! I haven't laid eyes on you since that day. How is the grain business? And how did that amalgamation work out?"

The assurance of this speaker—in the crowded corridor of the Hotel McAlpin—compelled me to turn and look at him, though I must say it is not my usual habit to "listen in" even in a hotel lobby.

"He is David M. Roth, one of the most famous memory experts in the United States," said my friend Kennedy, answering my question before I could get it out. "He will show you a lot more wonderful things than that, before the evening is over."

And he did.

As we went into the banquet room the toastmaster was introducing a long list of the guests to Mr. Roth. I got in line and when it came my turn, Mr. Roth asked, "What are your initials, Mr. Jones, and your business connection and telephone number?" Why he asked this, I learned later, when he picked out from the crowd the 60 men he had met two hours before and called each by name without a mistake. What is more, he named each man's business and telephone number, for good measure.

I won't tell you all the other amazing things this man did except to tell how he called back, without a minute's hesitation, long lists of numbers, bank clearings, prices, lot numbers, parcel post rates and anything else the guests gave him in rapid order.

The Amazing Memory Feats of David M. Roth

The Seattle Post Intelligencer said:

"Of the 180 members of the Seattle Rotary Club at a luncheon yesterday, not one left with the slightest doubt that Mr. Roth could do all he claimed for him. Rotarians at the meeting had to pinch themselves to see whether their eyes were awake or not.

"Mr. Roth started his exhibition by asking sixty of those present to introduce themselves by name to him. These waved their hands and instructed a member at a blackboard to write down names of firms, sentences, and notations as delivered separately, meanwhile sitting with his back to the writer and only hearing the questions by oral report. After this he was asked by different Rotarians to tell what was written down in various specific squares and gave the entire list without a mistake.

"After finishing with this Mr. Roth astounded and smiled by name the sixty men to whom he had been introduced earlier, told the questions had changed seats and food mixed with others proposed."

When I met Mr. Roth again—which you may be sure I did the first chance I got—he rather bowled me over by saying, in his quiet, modest way:

"There is nothing miraculous about my remembering anything I want to remember, whether it be names, faces, figures, facts or something I have read in a magazine.

"You can do this just as easily as I do. Anyone with an average mind can learn quickly to do exactly the same things which seem so miraculous when I do them.

"My own memory," continued Mr. Roth, "was originally very faulty. Yes it was—a really poor memory. On meeting a man I would lose his name in thirty seconds, while now there are thousands of men and women in the United States, many of whom I have met but once, the names of a large number of whom I can call on meeting them."

"That is all right for you, Mr. Roth," I interrupted, "you have given years to it. But how about me?"

"Mr. Jones," he replied, "I can teach you the method of obtaining a good memory in one evening. This is not a guess, because I have done it with many pupils. In the first of seven simple lessons which I have prepared for home study, I show you the basic principle of my whole system and you will find it—not hard work as you might fear—but just like playing a fascinating game. I will prove it to you."

He didn't have to prove it. His Course did; I got it the very next day from his publishers, the Independent Corporation.

When I tackled the first lesson, I suppose I was the most surprised man in forty-eight States to find that I had learned in about one hour—how to remember a list of one hundred words so that I could call them off forward and back without a single mistake.

That first lesson stuck. And so did the other six.

Read this letter from Terence J. McManus, of the firm of Olcott, Bonynge, McManus & Ernst, Attorneys and Counsellors at Law, 170 Broadway, and one of the most famous trial lawyers in New York:

> "May I take occasion to state that I regard your service in giving this system to the world as a public benefaction? The wonderful simplicity of the method, and the ease with which its principles may be acquired, especially appeal to me. I may add that I already had occasion to test the effectiveness of the first two lessons in the preparation for trial of an important action in which I am about to engage."

Mr. McManus didn't put it a bit too strong.

The Roth Course is priceless to me. I can absolutely count on my memory now. I can call the name of most any man I have met before—and I am getting better all the time. I can remember figures I wish to remember. Telephone numbers come to mind instantly, once I have filed them by Mr. Roth's easy method. Street addresses are just as easy.

The old fear of forgetting (you know what that is) has vanished. I used to be "scared stiff" on my feet—because I wasn't sure. I couldn't remember what I wanted to say.

Now I am sure of myself, and confident, and "easy as an old shoe" when I get on my feet at the club, or at a banquet, or in a business meeting, or in any social gathering.

Perhaps the most enjoyable part of it all is that I have become a good conversationalist—and I used to be as silent as a sphinx when I got into a crowd of people who knew things.

Now I can call up most any fact I want right at the time I need it most. I used to think a "hair trigger" memory belonged only to the prodigy and genius. Now I see that nearly every man of us has that kind of a memory if he only knows how to make it work right.

I tell you it is a wonderful thing, after groping around in the dark for so many years to be able to switch the big searchlight on your mind and see most everything you want to remember.

This Roth Course will do wonders in your office.

Since we took it up you never hear anyone in our office say "I guess" or "I think it was about so much" or "I forget that right now" or "I can't remember" or "I must look up his name." Now they are right there with the answer.

Have you ever heard of "Multigraph" Smith? Real name H. Q. Smith, Division Manager of the Multigraph Sales Company, Ltd., in Montreal. Here is just a bit from a letter of his that I saw last week:

> "Here is the whole thing in a nutshell: Mr. Roth has a most remarkable Memory Course. It is simple, and easy as falling off a log. Yet with one hour a day of practice, anyone—I don't care who he is—can improve his memory."

My advice to you is don't wait another minute. Send to Independent Corporation for Mr. Roth's amazing course and see what a wonderful memory you have got. Your dividends in increased power will be enormous.

VICTOR JONES.

While Mr. Jones has chosen the story form for this account of his experience and that of others with the Roth Memory Course, he has used only facts that are known personally to the President of the Independent Corporation, who hereby verifies the accuracy of Mr. Jones' story in all its particulars.

Haphazard Financial System Which Has Necessitated the New Budget System for Federal Government

By WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Retiring Secretary of Commerce

CURRENT discussion respecting a national budget is interesting both for what is said and for what is left unsaid. It has been treated by distinguished members of Congress and of the Executive, including in both cases those now serving and those who have ceased to serve. All agree that there is extravagance. Its extent, its cause, the responsibility for it—on these men differ. The Congressional partakers in the debate find extravagance original with the executive departments. There is, they allege, no adequate check upon them, their estimates are not properly supervised, there is no executive examination of them, they represent the overzealous ambitions of services and they come before Congress expressing rather the desires of eager officers than the actual necessities of the Government. A distinguished member of a former Administration substantially concurs in this view. Congress gets before it, so these advocates allege, estimates of which the only thing certain is that they are too large. Again it is agreed that the case is aggravated by the fact that there are numerous appropriating committees, some having a peculiar care of the needs of one service or department. There is no unified Congressional action. The result is financial chaos, so far as expenditures are concerned, with extravagance.

A former Speaker and present member of the Appropriations Committee lucidly points out how the present lack of system grew up, but even he omits, as others do, certain important factors, some of them so important as to be at times controlling.

There is much truth in the statements briefly summarized above, but they are not the whole truth—far from it. Collectively they are one of those half truths which give a false impression. I am a strong believer in the budget. I believe, also, in a method of appropriations which would treat all services in the same spirit. That by itself would be a distinct advance. But I hope for this advance for some other reasons than have been suggested. It seems to me possible that with the budget and the centralised authority some important Government services which have long been financially starved may get the due portion of the public funds.

It is significant that in the discussion thus far one group of men have had nothing to say, and yet they are the men who know the most of the subject. These are the chiefs of services. Knowledge of the detailed workings of Government services is not widespread in Washington. Very few members of Congress are closely informed upon the subject. Many of them have no time to learn details. There are, I believe, relatively few in either House who could name offhand the services which constitute any two great executive departments. Of their detailed operations they have ordinarily but little knowledge. There are exceptions, of course. There are men in both houses who have thorough knowledge of some services. There are some men who have a general knowledge of many. These are few.

This is natural, nay, inevitable. The legislator has his own duties. Speaking from my own experience, one's district requires a reasonable and proper attention. This takes time. The legislative business of the House and the necessary attendance upon committees require more time. He is a rare member who, when these two things are done, has energy or time to enter upon a thorough study of the Government departments. No one is present upon the floor of either House to speak for them. Speeches are not uncommon in both houses respecting department work in which statements are made which, to say the least, are remote from the facts. I have known addresses pertaining directly to certain departmental work in which there was hardly an accurate statement. On special committees, where particular subjects are inquired into, there are well-informed men. There are not many of them. Congress has too much to do for that, and the Government work is too vast.

Nevertheless, Congressional opinion is always vocal. Men safely speak with assumed authority in the absence of

PRESIDENT AS NATION'S GENERAL MANAGER

BY 286 to 8 the House of Representatives has voted to add to the duties of the President that of General Manager of the United States.

The Federal Budget bill did not say this in so many words, and the public up to this time is not aware of the significance of the measure, but that is the effect of the Government's new money-control plan.

The House has willed the Bureau of Budget, with a Director who, in effect, will be the President's Executive Secretary, as Mr. Twomby is his political Secretary; and if the Senate concurs, this and other provisions of the measure will make the piece of legislation one of the most far-reaching changes in the history of the country. It will add a new qualification to the Presidential requirements of the future—the ability to grasp, as the General Manager of a great corporation grasps, the whole economic problem of the Administration. It will put on the President a test of efficiency which it has not been possible to apply before.

Back of every problem that now faces the Administration, it is asserted, is a business problem, not only within the Administration, but as to those questions that call for guidance toward solution: the high cost of living, the searching out of profiteering, the struggle between capital and labor. But even a President possessing the qualities of a man with large business experience, and at the same time liberality of view, with the grasp to break through confusion and seize the economic heart of the issues, no matter what his ability and zeal for reform, could not, without new legislation, exercise economic dominance over the departments under him and meet in the most effective way the insistent demand to cut down expenses of the Government.

Cost of government, indeed, is to become one of the big issues in future campaigns. State elections have often turned on the question of extravagance, but up to this time that has been an issue remote from Presidential campaigns. Now all this is to change, in a way the public is just beginning to sense, and in the near future a President may be re-elected because he has shown himself to be a great administrator, with that grasp of business genius which produces concrete results, or rejected because, under a budget test that exposes failure, he proved himself a bad General Manager. Cost of government had been remote from the voter's mind up to the period of the war, because taxes were indirect and the total amount to be raised comparatively small.

In the accompanying article, Secretary Redfield discusses the disadvantages of the present bungling system, whose faults have made a budget plan necessary.

those who know. When one cannot be called in question for his words, and no one is present to give the facts, criticism is easy and safe. The chiefs of services, not merely the heads of departments, but the men who operate the services, who originate the estimates and do the spending, these men are not heard outside committee rooms. If, however, these men would speak publicly with frankness, and could safely do so, if they were to tell their actual experiences, the tale would be different from that which now is heard. They would show waste from the cutting down of appropriations, and losses by the reduction of estimates; they could tell how for lack of reasonable expenditure in small amounts the services of valuable men were lost, and of the effort to keep public work moving in the absence of sufficient means.

The Congressional definition of economy would be amusing if it were not sad. It is the absence of expenditure. On Sept. 28, 1919, the Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations is quoted as saying, "In the last twenty years only two appropriation estimates offered by the executive departments were not cut down either in the House or Senate. A saving of more than $500,000,000 has resulted." How does he know that it was all saving? To state as a broad principle, everywhere applicable, that to reduce estimates is to save money is absurd. I have known more than one case where serious loss was caused through cutting an estimate.

Congressional statements as to economy have on a basis the difference between totals. Expenditures of one Congress so many millions—expenditures of another Congress so many fewer millions—result an economy equal to the difference. The papers print this (one wonders if the editors do it with their tongues in their cheeks) and it goes out to the country. Does the country swallow it? Lincoln said: "You can fool some of the people all of the time and all of the people some of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time." Does this futile feeling really "go down"? Does any one seriously believe that the Congress or the party which spends less than another therefore saves so much? How about the things left undone? Who knows what they are and what the cost of neglecting them is? Many cases could be cited from Government experience to show the absurdity of the usual Congressional viewpoint. Important work has been interrupted and done in separate installments at a greatly enhanced cost because an estimate has been cut down. Repairs to vessels, buildings, wharves, and other equipment have been stopped, costly depreciation has taken place because estimates were cut down. Government work is carried on in many places at unnecessary expense to the taxpayers because estimates are cut down. The services of valuable officers have been lost, many human lives have been lost and much property has been destroyed because estimates have been cut down.

So far as appears from debates the Congressional mind wholly fails to see what every business man of intelligence knows, that wise expenditure is the truest economy; that the real question is not what sum is spent but what is secured for the expenditure. This, and this only, is the test of economy. To judge of the economical use of money by the difference between totals is suitable perhaps to the mind of a child, but is not the thinking of adult intelligence familiar with financial matters. If revenues do not exist or cannot be had, money cannot be spent, but do not call mere absence of expenditure economy. It often is costly waste. No sane factory manager would let an organization run down merely to save direct outlay, if he had the money. Should he do so he would be "fired" when the Board of Directors got at him. There are departmental estimates which can truly be called expenses. There are others which are as truly investments. To judge them by the same standard is hardly sane.

Some Government services, strange as it may seem, are so productive as to far more than pay their cost. To class these, as is done, as if there were no difference between them and those which represent outlay without direct return, is hardly reasonable. True, every Government service should be worth its cost and in that sense pay a return, but there are some that do both, that give a full return in work and a second return in money or wealth as well. To save $15,000 and in so doing to stop the development of millions of pounds of new food, to save $25,000 and in so doing to cease the salvage of many millions in value of wasted materials, to save $80,000 and stop productive work bringing wealth to the country and powerful support to many large industries, these are instances of alleged economies resulting from cutting down department estimates.

There is truth in the statement that some estimates are extravagant, that some bureau chiefs ask more than they actually require, and every one practically familiar with the details of administration in Washington knows that the practice, though reprehensible, arises because Congress encourages it. There are service chiefs who know from hard experience that Congressional committees do not take their statements at par and that their estimates are habitually and often ignorantly cut down. They have felt the result of this in crippling their work. They naturally argue that since their estimates are to be cut down anyhow they would better make them sufficiently large to secure enough, when reduced, to carry their work along as it should be done. I know that some argue this way. I have had the argument urged upon me as a basis for my own action. Nevertheless, I do not believe that any large proportion of the bureau chiefs in Washington act upon this theory. They usually deal fairly with Congress and submit estimates for what they really believe they ought to have. They rarely or never get it, and frequently leave something undone that ought to be done because they do not get it. They are enthusiastic men, earnest in their work. Each thinks his work of vital importance. They are sometimes right, sometimes wrong, but as between them and the committees of Congress it would be ridiculous to say that errors were not mutual.

It is the simple truth that the normal condition of some Government services is poverty as compared with the work they are called upon to do. Congress not infrequently imposes additional duties upon them without providing means for carrying out the work.

Furthermore, sometimes the protests of an executive department against a certain expenditure as unnecessary and unwise are overruled by Congress, which has insisted upon the executive disbursing public moneys in cases where the necessity of the expenditure is more than doubtful. For example the publication called the Official Register, issued every second year, has cost since 1913 over $38,000. Another edition now pending will bring the total outlay in excess of $50,000 for printing and binding alone. There is, in addition, the cost of compiling the information, estimated as over $4,000 for the last single issue. On account of an increase in the Government personnel of over 100,000 names, it is estimated the next issue will cost for compiling at least $6,000 and that it will mean a total outlay of about $18,000. It has been repeatedly pointed out that this is a needless outlay, that the publication is necessarily antiquated before it is printed and that it is unreliable if not useless for its intended purpose, while inexpensive effective substitutes already exist. Nevertheless the outlay is continued.

An amusing example of needless expense continued after attention has been repeatedly called to it exists in connection with the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The building which this service occupies lies directly across the street from the House Office Building. A steam supply main from the Capitol power plant passes directly through the basement of the building of the Survey to the House Office Building. The Survey, however is not permitted to use steam from this pipe, but is required to operate its own separate boilers, purchase coal, hire firemen and other help for operating an independent heating plant in the very basement through which an ample supply of Government steam passes to another building.

So, also, a local electric plant is working in the basement of the House Office Building, across the street, but the Coast Survey is obliged to purchase current from a commercial company and to employ a force of dynamo tenders throughout a twenty-four-hour day. In this case, where the law requires a service to operate a light plant and a heating plant where both light and heat are available from a central power plant maintained by the Government, the chief of the service estimates that $4,000 per annum is wasted. The change of a few words in the law would correct it. This has been asked, but has not been done.

Looking at the subject of Government expenditures from the standpoint of one trained in industry, I conclude that practically any change in the present system would be for the better. A brief experience in Congress and a longer one in the executive tells me that while there is undoubtedly waste in so great an organization as the executive departments of our Government jointly compose, the waste is often due to the requirements of Congress, that the cutting down of estimates is frequently a costly process, and that less suspicion and more confidence in public matters given to men who in every private relation are trustworthy and who are experts would be profitable. I have been directly told by members of appropriations committees that they did not trust their executive officers and have repeatedly seen estimates cut down without any regard whatever to the condition of the work concerned or to the enforcement of the law for which the funds were intended. There is need for financial reform in Washington.

I venture to hope the coming of a budget, in which the actual needs of every service might be weighed and reviewed, would lead officers in the purpose of Congress to treat their services with regard for their actual needs and on the part of Congress to confidence in the fairness and expert knowledge of the service chiefs. In practical administration the most unfortunate thing in Washington is the gulf that separates Congress and the executive. I do not refer to the gulf of party differences, for the gulf exists irrespective of parties. I refer to the absence of knowledge on the part of Congress of the executive services, to the absence of means for conveying that knowledge to Congress except through the very indirect and confused course of committees, and to the lack of confidence that exists in Congress in the trustworthiness of the chiefs of services when their statements as to their financial needs are made.

One phase of the Congressional outlook is illuminating on this subject of mutual confidence. Practically it is a mistake to have much of an unexpended balance of an appropriation at the end of a fiscal year. There has to be some such balance, but beware of having too much! Because when at the next session one goes before the Appropriations Committee, the first question is apt to be "What was your unexpended balance last year?" If there was a considerable sum returned to the Treasury, the thought of the committee is not to commend you for having saved money to with white stripes, a sort of thing that would have warmed the heart of Naximova. She was a willowy thing, made more so by the studied lines of the gown. The dizzying effect of the black and white was relieved by a sharp line of white fur on both sides of the skirt. The hat sounded the same note as the dress. The white fur predominated, and a simple bit of jet completed it. As the wearer moved from out the lobby into the doorway of the dining room, one could hear the tinkling sounds of golden eagles that were joyous in their ability to serve this creature. For assuredly, the eagles that were helping her appease the god of luxury for her war-time neglect of him were many and of large dimensions.

Mirror of Highest Living

Something passed quickly, lightly, fleetly. It must have been a woman, for the voice that trailed after it was soft and sweet and feminine. All that one could see of her, however, was a gay green silk hat, gorgeously embroidered in gold thread. Below that were swathes of fur, fur, and more fur. Folds of it, yards of it, streamers of it, all draped loosely and lovingly about the little bit of femininity whose husband could afford to dress her so. "Sable," came the informing whisper of the lady who knew.

More fur passed, Kolinsky, silver fox; more sable, all kinds of sable, Russian, American, and maybe Eskimo, if there is such a thing. The fleeting headgear made a comet tail rainbow of colors—greens and oranges and gold predominating.

Four women were clustered disconsolately by the door. A printed placard, "All tables engaged," stared them in the face. One hundred thousand dollars worth of furs and jewels—or maybe the great proscenium and playing a part in the show of wealth.

The door of the restaurant led into a great oval room. Around this room was a narrow gallery. Every luncheon table was filled with groups of the exquisitely and gayly dressed, who were bent on no greater pleasures than an afternoon at the theatre. Black velvets and blue cloth served as backgrounds for orange hats, golden bonnets and green turbans.

A beautiful young woman—not only were they all young, but they were all beautiful with the beauty of the boudoir and the masseuse, as well as of the outdoors and the activity which the war had brought into the lives of so many of them—moved down the passageway in search of the head waiter. Tall and straight, the way a number of generations here and a good income makes them, she made a striking figure in her black velvet, short-sleeved gown. Her white mousquetaire gloves were drawn up to a point not quite within the reach of the narrow silk ribbons ending in a bow that served as a border to the abbreviated sleeves. A "blue fox" skin, whose name is a misnomer, hung over one arm. Her face was wreathed by a large black hat unrelieved by any color.

Built in the same mold, yet showing a different tendency in type of clothes, her companion was dressed in a simple, suit of dark blue tricotine, with a bright green chiffon vest, gayly embroidered. Around her neck were two strings of pearls. At the end of the longer string hung a green jade ornament. The hat was black, with a touch of green.

Many dresses in severe dark blue tricotine passed by. All were wonderfully tailored. All were different. Not one of them could be duplicated in a show window at any of the shops on either Fifth Avenue or its side streets. The original doubtless was already lost in the mind of its creator.

There was one that especially attracted the eye. The gown was dark and severe with a very narrow gold ribbon belt. The sleeves were short, very short. The healthy, outdoor complexion of the owner was enhanced by a small, smart orange velour hat, as soft in texture as the skin of the face beneath. A soft brown feather was draped around the crown of the hat, and below that was a bit of gold braid.

The view from the balcony ranged over hats of all sizes and colors and forms. There was one piquantly overshadowing the face of a young woman drinking her two tablespoonfuls of coffee for which she had paid 50 cents. It was of black chiffon velvet—that means velvet of the softest possible texture. It was folded up in front, in the manner dear to the heart of Wild West cowboys. From both ends of the upturned front streamed a tail of monkey fur. Streamed is the proper word, for there is nothing they resembled so greatly as two graceful sweeps of water.

Near her sat two women whose ages were—but what does age matter in a gathering of this sort? One of them wore a deep dull orange hat fashioned of upstanding feathers. It was a towering hat, a very impressive hat, of a style dear to the hearts of million-dollared dowagers. Opposite her, in happy contrast, sat a friend wearing a small, simple, rolling-brim hat of a warm old blue, a color that is elusively rare. Both of them had carelessly thrown their rich scarves—sable and pointed fox—on the chairs beside them.

The waiter interrupted our fashion study by bringing in the menu. Except for an English line at the very top, it was printed in French. The English line ran to the effect that one could purchase non-alcoholic champagne for the trifling sum of $8 a quart. Several bottles of this dispiriting beverage were seen on the tables. Not many, however, be it said in passing. The prices for the food were entirely in keeping with the surroundings.

A table close by, around which were seated three women and one man, proved interesting in the light of frenzied computation of the wealth gathered there. One woman, if her conversation was an index, belonged to the kind whom the war had made rich. Another was a very big and very heavy, and she wore a vast quantity of diamonds. The rest of her clothes didn't matter, her jewels were so much in evidence. Opposite her sat a very young woman in a dress of a deep red silk duvetyne. The sleeves were short. Around her right wrist she wore a bracelet and watch of platinum and diamonds. Her black chiffon velvet hat was heavily trimmed with a mass of paradise feathers. The third woman wore a well-tailored suit of blue material trimmed with an expensive lace collar and cuffs. Over the cuff of her coat sleeve was a bracelet that evidently came out of the same collection as the jewels worn by her companion. It was of platinum, and fuller of diamonds than a plum pudding of plums. The man was the only drab being there. The same could be said of the entire room. The men only were drab. There were so few of them, however, that they didn't count.

As matinée time drew near, the outward procession began—a promenade of the sisters, daughters, wives, and mothers of the wealthiest members of New York society and its country relatives. A woman in the centre of the room languidly got into her short coat of baby Persian lamb. Another woman adjusted a long chinchilla scarf, whose heavy brocaded satin lining made a pleasing contrast to the color of the fur. Still another joined the parade in a long coat of squirrel and a hat of the same fur draped around a crown made of green silk and brocaded in gold. Another passed down the aisle in a sable cape that reached to her knees. Her hat was a unique combination of velvet and heavy brown masses of fringe that circled around it in dizzying whirls.

So they passed out. One more New York day was rolling around in the way they all roll for the "set" that floats through life on a flood of gold.

Mirror of the Cost of Highest Living

Where New York Lunches on the Top Note of Luxury and the Glory of Woman Is Her Raiment

AMERICAN women, when they have the wherewithal, or sometimes even if they haven't, know how to do things in proper fashion. There is no getting away from that.

A little more than two years ago, when their nation entered the war, every mother's daughter of them, and every grandmother's and great-grandmother's daughter for that matter, changed her man-hunting, man-enticing, man-fascinating clothes for the more sensible and practical, soldier-helping, man-healing, and war-winning garments. That these were as becoming as the ones worn in the pre-war periods was perhaps a matter of chance, somewhat aided by the skillful touches of artists of fashions. The point is, however, that American woman did not spoil the picture of war work and war earnestness by wearing the wrong kind of clothes. Her sense of setting steered her. As it always does.

The war is over, in spite of Senate committees and poet warriors. The war is over, and none so quick to appreciate the fact as the American woman. Again her sense of proper setting and artistic staging has come to the fore, and she has blossomed out anew in a quiet splendor of richness and beauty. She is celebrating the new peace that has come, and for lack of bells and trumpets and cymbals she has decked herself out in all the glory that war savings and war profits will allow. Her clothes are her must be a deaf mortal indeed who would deny the thrilling sound of them. The law of the pendulum is true, and the return from the side of economy and war-stinting has been a free and rapid swing to the opposite extreme of luxury and spending. All in spite of committees and movements and delegations to limit the amount of post-war spending. On clothes especially.

This story has to do with a visit to the restaurant of one of the most expensive hotels in New York. It happened to be the Ritz. But the scene could be fairly matched in perhaps half a dozen other places in the city.

It was a matinée afternoon. The luncheon room was a symphony of color and jewels and furs and fabrics. The perfumes of Araby were there, and the wares of Persia. The furs of the frozen north were there, and the pearls of the southern fisheries. The women, young, younger, and very young—there were no old ones—poured out of the limousines and taxicabs at the door. An actress, known to the devotees of the motion-picture screen and the stage, stood posed for a minute against the gray door. She formed a dark silhouette in a black velvet gown, unrelieved by color up to her head, which was covered by a sharply contrasting small beaver hat of bright green. Two black aigrettes served to complete the harmony of the picture. She chatted idly for a moment and moved on.

She was followed, casually, accidentally, as one visitor to a restaurant naturally follows another, by another apparition, or attraction—the words are not adequate, but the sight was equally

Rowing 50 Miles a Day in Arctic Waters

Some Hardships and Perils of the Leden Expedition in the Northern Seas—A Sick Man Who Wanted to Risk His Life for an Eskimo Dog

BY CHRISTIAN LEDEN.

To be wrecked thousands of miles from civilization, losing ship, cargo and nearly everything one has taken along for sustenance during the arctic Winter, is a desperate experience. It is especially desperate when one has the responsibility for a dozen other white men and the duty of getting them out of this barren, icebound country fit only for habitation by polar bears and Eskimos. Twice I have seen my vessel and all belongings swallowed up by the icy waters of the north—the first time in 1912, the second and, I hope, the last time, in the Summer of 1919.

Little did the light-hearted crowd of young men who left New York on the good ship Finback last Summer know what the future had in store for them. Little did they realize that they must row 100 miles in two days through sub-arctic waters. Most of them had never been in the north before and none of them except the Captain and myself had any experience of arctic travel.

Only two of the men and myself were to Winter in the north; the others were to return to New York this Fall, after having landed the exploring party, the cargo and provisions. One of the men who was to Winter with me was a mining engineer and geographer, the other was a sort of jack-of-all-trades, who was to be in charge of our headquarters. For myself, I was to continue my ethnological and anthropological investigations begun on previous expeditions. I was also to establish a commercial enterprise for some of my New York and Boston friends who had helped to finance the expedition.

There are many valuable kinds of raw materials to be obtained in the arctic and sub-arctic, and if we had not been wrecked we should have made a pile of money, besides collecting interesting scientific data.

The Captain, a weather-beaten whaling skipper of the old type, warned the crew before they started that a journey to the land of the polar bear was a serious matter, and nothing like a Coney Island picnic. I believe that all my companions before we were through with our journey agreed that the Captain was right. [illegible] acquainted with the Summer of the north and escaped the arctic Winter, for which I am truly thankful. I do not believe that many of them would have survived the Winter, as they had lost all their clothing in the wreck except what they wore.

As we were able to save only a few days' provisions and one week's fuel, the Winter would certainly have been hard on us; besides, young and inexperienced men are always careless and do not see the dangers of such inhospitable regions until it is too late to avert a catastrophe. It takes a long time to learn the art of living through an arctic Winter, and as a rule the smallest mistake means a man's life or health.

We had a famous old whaling Captain and ice pilot with us as master of the Finback. He had himself on previous voyages charted much of those northern seas. His soundings are to be found on the navigation maps and his beacons are seen on many islands and points in the north. We had got as far as the northwestern corner of Hudson Bay; only a few days more and we should have reached our goal. I almost felt that I could put my hand on both success and the fortune which awaited us there. But Fate decided otherwise.

The Captain himself was up in the mast directing the movements of the ship and the chief officer was at the wheel. The idea of being up in the mast no doubt was a good one, because from high above one can generally see shallow water for quite a distance. I myself was down in the crew's quarters giving a sick man medicine at the time the ship struck the rock. We had two sick men on board at the time. One of them was very sick, indeed; the other one, who had been unable to move from his bed, was cured as by a miracle when he heard we were wrecked and had to take to the boats.

At first I could not believe that our beautiful ship had made its last journey. It proved impossible to get her off the reef, although we employed all the means we had at our disposal. She listed over in no time, with her starboard side hitting against the sharp rocks, and strong as she was, with the heavy load she had in her, the sharp projecting corner of the bottom rock against her side proved too much for her. She hardly gave us time to save a few days' provisions, and most of us lost almost all we had in the way of clothing and personal effects. I managed to save only the ship's papers, the chronometer and compasses and a very few of my own things. My own daily journal and private papers were already partly spoiled by salt water before I could get to them.

Jack, an Eskimo Boy Who Helped the Expedition After the Wreck.

In the meantime the Captain and the crew had made a raft of two of the boats and some lumber from the deck cargo. On this they stowed some of the ship's stores, food, matches, &c.

A strong wind was blowing with some sea and the vessel was lying there rocking on her starboard side, just at the edge of the reef. We expected her to roll off and sink into deep water at any moment, taking us with her in case we were on or near her.

The Captain told the men to get into the boats and pull off, himself being in charge of the raft with the provisions and most of the crew on it. The chief officer, the second engineer, the sick sailor and myself were in the small lifeboat, where we had the ship's papers, the chronometer and the compasses.

We had a little Eskimo dog on board which was the pet of the crew. When we were ready to start, the poor sick sailor remembered the dog, and wanted to board the wreck again in order to save it, for it seemed that the rest of the crew had, in the excitement, forgotten him. I had not forgotten the dog, however, and some time before had stowed it away in our boat. Our blankets and clothing covered the dog in such a way that nobody could see him. As the sick sailor stumbled along, trying to get back on board, he happened to walk on the dog, which made his presence known with a yelp.

It was already getting late, the wind and sea were against us. We tried to head for Fullerton Harbor, about five miles way, where there was an Eskimo camp. The Captain and the other men on the raft seemingly had a hard time rowing against wind and tide. Twice I went back to them with our boat and threw them a line to help tow them to land. But the wind and sea were now so wild that we ran a great risk of letting our boat dash to pieces against the heavy raft, which was heaving and swaying on the high seas. The Captain, seeing this, told us to cast off and try to reach land ourselves.

We made a landing at Fullerton shortly before sunset, and were met by the Eskimo women and children. All the men, except one old fellow and a half-grown boy, were away. Those two I took with me and set out again, with a whaleboat and a sail belonging to the Eskimos, to look for my comrades. I could not see any more of the Captain and the men on the raft, and was afraid that they had drifted out into the open sea, where they no doubt would have a terrible time during the night, as the gale was steadily increasing.

I told the chief officer and the second engineer, who had been with me in the lifeboat, to take care of the instruments and papers and to get the sick men into a shelter. As I was ready to start two other Eskimos came running toward us from the mainland. I had met them on my previous expedition and knew them to be good men, so I took them along in the boat and started out to look for the Captain and the crew.

We now had the wind with us and were making great speed. We were sailing for our lives, in hope of rescuing our companions before dark. The two Eskimos told me they had been some distance away, hunting, that day, but that when they saw the ship go aground they started to run toward Fullerton in the hope that they might be of help. They had left their wives and children behind, and had not eaten since the day before. They had gone out at daybreak to hunt something for breakfast, but had still not succeeded in finding anything when they abandoned their search to come to our help. They had run about ten miles, wading through an arm of the sea at low tide, in order to reach us.

Just as it got dark we reached the last big island on the coast southeast of Fullerton and discovered that the Captain had managed to make a landing there. We now had something to eat, both Eskimos and white men. Every one was safe for the time, and my thoughts returned to the wreck. As I thought the Captain might want to go back to look for the Finback, I told him to take the boat I had come in, as that was a fairly good one with mast and sail.

He started out with the chief engineer and the second mate and one of the Eskimos. I stayed with the crew on the island, waiting for the tide to come up so we could get our boats off and take the men into Fullerton. These boats were the ones used in the construction of the raft, but we had not been able to save their masts and sailing gear before leaving the ship. We should therefore have to row against the wind.

About midnight we got the boats off, but found that they were leaking, having fared badly on the rocky beach. Three to four men had to bale constantly to keep us afloat, and there were therefore not enough men left to row the heavy boats against the gale. We had to spend the night in the boats, baling them out until daybreak, when there was high tide and we could pull them up to a safe spot on the island.

Everybody was wet, sleepy and hungry, but they had to keep on working in order to save the boats. By the first daylight we began to repair them. We found that one of them was in such hopeless shape that we could do nothing with it at the time, with the few tools that we had. Finally we made a start again with the better of the boats, only taking a few of the men along, as we did not think it safe to load the boat too heavily.

As soon as we came around the point of the island we got the full force of the gale, which was still increasing. We found that we could not make any headway without a sail, and had to return

Regular Army School of Divinity

By C. B. HOWARD,
Major of Infantry, U. S. A.

NOBODY, probably, would regard the regular army as a training school for the ministry. Yet the enlisted ranks number ministers of the Gospel among "army graduates"—as well as engineers, surgeons and other professional persons. Examination of the records has led to the discovery that men who enlisted with the regulars and did their share of kitchen police, stable fatigue and guard duty in camp, and bore the brunt of battle in the field, today wear the cross of the Chaplain in our great army.

It is not a large company, but it includes former "pill slingers," "doughboys," "wagon soldiers," and "leather breeches," each of whom is now a "Holy Joe"—as the soldier affectionately, if irreverently, dubs his Chaplain. Here is the list:

Simon M. Lutz, enlisted in the 5th Pennsylvania Infantry at outbreak of the Spanish-American war, and later was transferred to the Hospital Corps. He has had a diversity of experience to enhance his native ability as a Chaplain, for he has farmed, kept store, studied chemistry, taught school, and been a publisher. In 1905 he entered the regular army service as a Chaplain with the rank of First Lieutenant, and in 1912 was advanced to his present grade of Captain.

George Runyan Longbrake of Wisconsin was an enlisted man in the 6th Illinois Infantry when we went to war with Spain, and served with honor in the fighting branch until 1903. When he was mustered out he took up in civilian life the study he had begun, probably unconsciously, in the army, and was ordained a clergyman. He devoted much time to welfare work. In 1914 he came back into the service as Chaplain of the 3d Wisconsin Infantry when it was sent to the Mexican border. He holds the rank of First Lieutenant and is Chaplain of the 17th Regular Cavalry.

Oscar Lee Owens of Virginia was a Sergeant in a field hospital company of the Virginia National Guard. He won the degree of B. D. at Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary, and those of A. M. and Ph. D. at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, Md. He is a First Lieutenant in the regular service now.

[illegible] buck private in 1898. He won the B. Ph. degree in theology and accepted a commission as Chaplain with the rank of First Lieutenant.

Adolf John Schleisser of Jacksonville, Ill., was a private in Company H of the 1st Missouri Infantry from 1897 to 1899, and served in the ranks in the Spanish-American war. He studied when in the army and continued his course at Concordia Seminary. He, too, has taught school, and has written some good things and published others. His rank as Chaplain in the regular army is that of First Lieutenant.

John Roswell Edwards of Colorado walked the furrows of a farm for ten years, and drove his own automobile when he went to town. He was an active welfare worker in civilian life for four years, and now is Chaplain of the 19th Regular Field Artillery, with the rank of First Lieutenant.

With this showing, added weight is given to the claim of recruiting officers that the army is a great school where men do not "drop out" of ordinary life for their term of enlistment. It is a place where natural talent is developed, study is pursued, training acquired, and the foundation for a successful career when the soldier who has served with the colors is honorably discharged from the army. The recruit chooses his career for peacetime achievement, prepares himself for it while in the service, and comes out fitted to fill the place of his own selection as a civilian.

The Best Fish Meal Ever!

Try this fat, juicy mackerel AT MY EXPENSE

Folks, here's a real treat from Gloucester. A pail of fat, newly-packed mackerel especially selected for their color and flavor. You will surely relish these temptingly-good fish. These Davis' mackerel are yours to try, on request. Send no money—I'll forward the fish on approval and take all the risk myself.

Frank E. Davis, President

It Takes a Fisherman to Pick Out Good Fish

For generations back my people were fish-folks—the early settlers of Gloucester. I used to go to sea in my father's vessel after the mackerel. Little did I think then that what I learned about fish was ever going to be of real value to my friends or to me in a business way. If I hadn't learned what I did at sea the "Davis Folks" all over America would not write me as they do today: "Mr. Davis, we cannot get mackerel anywhere like yours." I've built up business with 100,000 homes. It's a joy to do business with home folks and to hold their confidence and good-will.

Our Own Home Kind

In those fishing days, father naturally picked out the best mackerel to take home for Winter. We picked out the plump ones. I came to know them at a glance. The meat when broiled is very tender and juicy. I sent friends some of my fish. And what they said about them made me realize how hard it is for people away from the seashore to get the right kind of fish. The secret is picking 'em out. The kind of mackerel [illegible] for our writer's supply are the kind I will send to you. We clean and trim them of heads and tails and send full net weight of clear fish. Whenever you want a good fish meal just take a fish from the pail, freshen it, and it is ready for cooking.

Fall Mackerel—Fat and Tender

Fall mackerel are the best eating fish. They're fat in the Fall, like a Turkey fattened for Thanksgiving. Most of the fish your dealer can buy are caught during the Spring and Summer when they are spawning and are, therefore, dry and tasteless. I have all I can do to supply my home customers without selling dealers. You can trade with me just as you do with your home grocer or butcher. And everything I send, delivered right to your door, by express or parcel post, is sent subject to your complete satisfaction or you do not pay for it. Is there any squarer way to do business than that? For 34 years this has been my steadfast policy.

Send No Cash—Try the Mackerel First

I want you to know before you pay that my fish will please you. If there is any possibility of a risk, I want it to be at my expense. Mail the coupon today and I'll ship at once a pail of my mackerel containing 10 lbs. net weight of the clear fish, each fish weighing from 1¼ lbs. to 1½ lbs. (packed as we send them the fish keep perfectly in your home for weeks), all charges prepaid, east of Kansas, so that your family will have a real Gloucester treat Sunday morning. Then, if my mackerel are not better than any you have ever tasted, send back the rest at my expense. If you are pleased with them, and I'm sure you will be, send me $4.90. At the same time ask for descriptive list of Davis' fish. Sold only direct—never to dealers. Mail the coupon now, with your business card, letterhead or reference.

the Government, but rather to rebuke you for having been extravagant in making the estimate of the previous year. This absurd condition is perfectly well known, and is the incentive to definite action looking toward avoiding unexpended balances so far as practicable. Therefore, toward the close of each fiscal year, services cast about to see what is actually needed for which the balance of the appropriation can be properly spent, and this expenditure is then made with the thought in mind that there should not be any considerable sum to return to the Treasury, lest one be mulcted when next he goes before the Appropriations Committee.

Not long ago the matter of the existing relation between Congress and the executive was stated thus by a colleague: "Congress feels that it has authority without accepting responsibility, and that the executive has responsibility, but without authority." Generalizations are never scientific statements of fact, but the above phrase states the substantial truth.

A year ago I had the privilege of seeing a Canadian Minister put his appropriation through the House of Commons in Ottawa. To me the process, while very thorough, seemed simple, clear, and practical. If we should so amend our practice as to permit a Cabinet Minister to appear in the House of Representatives on matters concerning his department, the results would be striking. Congress believes he would be on the defensive. I think the reverse would often be true. There would be fewer speeches if men were present who knew and could state the facts, and the speeches that were made would be more accurate. Knowledge would take the place of surmise, and truth the place of suspicion. Some slight readjustment would be required in executive details, but nothing which a month would not complete. Our legislative procedure would be simplified, and there would be very few after a year's experience who would suggest a return to our present inadequate methods.

up north had left and started on its journey back to civilization long ago. The wreck occurred late in the season, Oct. 11, and I lost almost everything except my gun and a little ammunition, my sleeping bag, and the clothing I had on. A terrible four days' gale and snow was the cause of the wreck. The Winter set in right away and everything froze up. My Eskimo companions did not complain of the hardships, and as I already had some experience in Eskimo life and arctic travels from my earlier expeditions in Greenland, I made the best of it among the Eskimos, who were willing to take me in as one of themselves.

For six weeks I had on the same clothing day and night, frozen in the daytime and wet during the night as it thawed out in my sleeping bag. The temperature went far below zero before I had an opportunity of getting fur for proper Winter clothing to take the place of my wet, frozen rags. In spite of the wreck I did stay in the country until I had accomplished what I had set out to do. I spent three Winters in snow houses with no fire and mostly raw, frozen meat for food before I again saw civilization. The temperature was often 60 below zero or more, and I learned enough about blizzards and arctic Winter life to know that it was no place for my inexperienced crew of the Finback.

15 MINUTES A DAY
Gives You A Wonderful Command of Language

Sherwin Cody's "100% Self-Correcting Method" Improves Your English

You are sized up every day by the way you speak and write. The words you use, the way you use them, how you spell them, your punctuation, your grammar—all of these tell your story plainly. And it is a story open to all. An unusual command of language enables you to present your ideas, in speech or on paper, clearly, forcefully, convincingly.

"100% Self-Correcting Method"

A simple method has been invented which will help you acquire a command of the English language from the ground up. Sherwin Cody, one of the best-known teachers of Practical English, after twenty years of research and study, has perfected an invention which places the ability to talk and write with correctness and force within reach of every one with ordinary intelligence. Sherwin Cody was amazed to discover that the average person in school or in business is only 61% efficient in the vital points of English grammar. That is because the methods of teaching English in school left you only a hazy idea of the subject—they did not stick in your mind. But Sherwin Cody's new invention upsets all old standards of teaching English. His students secured more improvement in five weeks than had previously been obtained in several times that period. Only 15 minutes a day of spare time with this "100% Self-Correcting Method" will, within a very short time, help you obtain an easy command of language.

On April 3, 1918, Mr. Cody was granted a patent on his unique device, and now he places it at your disposal. It overcomes the only weak point in instruction-by-mail, it actually takes the place of an instructor at your elbow. It assigns you lessons in Letter Writing, Spelling, Punctuation, Grammar, Reading and Conversation, corrects them for you, and anticipates your questions. It even grades your paper and assigns you your class percentage till you reach the 100% mark. Mr. Cody has written a booklet explaining his new course in detail. If you feel your lack of Language Power, if you are ever embarrassed by mistakes in grammar, spelling, or punctuation, if you cannot command the exact words to express your ideas, this booklet will be a revelation to you. Merely mail the coupon and it will be sent by return mail. Sherwin Cody's new invention makes command of language easy to gain in 15 minutes of your daily spare time. Mail this coupon AT ONCE.

Comprehensive and Complete.
"I am glad to inform you that I find your English Course the best among the several I have taken. It is the most comprehensive and complete, for it covers all matters that a student needs to know in the study of English. Being a Porto Rican I wish to learn English as correctly as I can without going abroad, and your course is giving me this opportunity."
M. SANCHEZ MUJALTER, San Juan, P. R.

Shows Signal Improvement.
"I have examined a number of English Courses and believe that, for a mild remedial training in good English, there can be no comparison between the Sherwin Cody 100% Self-Correcting Course. It is a perfect drilling in the thousand principles which are shamefully neglected in the public schools, and without which no one can attain a command of our language.
"The treatment of letter writing is the most thoroughly practical I have ever seen. A young man or a young woman could do nothing better to improve his or her business than to take up your course, and then quickly and easily attain skill in the handling of correspondence, accuracy in spelling and punctuation, correctness in speech and writing, through the admirable lessons on Conversation and Reading—a broader intelligence, culture, and power."

again. Later during the forenoon the Captain came back with the good boat. He had not been able to find the wreck, although he had been sailing around all night. Finally he had reached Fullerton, where he had met the chief officer. The latter, with the second engineer and the sick sailor, had been back to the wreck with the lifeboat during the night. They had hoped that at high tide they would be able to get the ship off the reefs, and had hung on the entire night. But the water rose with the same speed inside the vessel as the tide rose without, so that at full tide she was almost entirely submerged.

My spirits sank low when the Captain brought me this news; then I knew that all we could hope for was to save the lives of our men. We got all the men over to Fullerton on that day, Aug. 24. By the time we got them to the Eskimo camp they had been soaking wet and without sleep for over thirty hours. Most of them had nothing to put on while they were drying their wet clothes. The sick man had only been able to save a pair of drawers, an old pair of rubber boots and a coat. In this miserable costume he had been sitting, wet and freezing, in the lifeboat during the whole night. I thought the poor fellow would die.

We were at the time of the wreck about 2,800 miles from New York, and about 1,800 miles from the nearest port in Newfoundland where we could communicate with the civilized world. But this 1,800-mile way to Newfoundland, in our small, open boats, would, of course, have been impossible to accomplish; besides, we had not been able to save provisions enough for such a trip. Another way out would have been with boats along the west coast of Hudson Bay, down to Nelson River, from which we could try to get out with Indians and canoes. But even this journey was very doubtful, as it most likely would freeze up long before we even got down to Port Nelson.

Our only hope was a trading steamer which I knew was to pass about a hundred miles south of us around the 24th of August, but as we were wrecked the 23d of August we had no time to lose. It seemed almost hopeless—a hundred miles in small open boats, with unfavorable winds and with men unaccustomed to the rigors of this life. Even with fair winds it was a three days' sailing from Fullerton, and the trading steamer was not expected to stop more than two days. Moreover, we had to give our played-out men a few hours' rest, and it took us two days to get our boats into fit condition to make the trip.

It was hard, especially for myself, to leave the vicinity of the wreck and start back to civilization before I had accomplished what I set out to do. Besides, I really loved our beautiful ship, the Finback, and I mourn her loss as I would mourn the death of a friend. She was a wonderful craft, made of selected materials, by an excellent shipbuilder; her lines and shape were most beautiful. She was as useful and practical for our purpose as she was lovely to look upon. Never have I seen a wooden vessel more successful in boring through the ice. Her shape was ideal in this respect; the ice simply could not get hold of her. The engine was also excellent, capable of running nine knots and working as sure as a clock. And she was a wonderful sailer. We had electric light, Marconi wireless, and other modern comforts on board.

We had spent all of a week boring through the heaviest field ice, against a strong current, and were successful even to a higher degree than we expected. The responsive way of the vessel in obeying the wheel was of great importance in manoeuvring the drifting field ice. Never did I see a vessel so easy to steer. With the Finback we had successfully braved a fortnight's constant fog, hundreds of big icebergs, a three days' gale which alone would have been hard on an ordinary wooden vessel, and ten days of the heaviest field ice I have been in since I was in East Greenland.

At last, on Aug. 28, two days after the trading ship was due, we were ready to start our desperate boat journey. The wind and weather conditions were so unfavorable that we could not use our sails, these sails upon which we had been sewing those two precious days. So we had to depend solely upon our oars.

The memory of the struggle of the next two days to reach the trading ship will always remain in my memory. Everything was against us. Only the courageous hearts and the strong arms of these American and Scandinavian seamen saved us from disaster. Everybody rowed, and rowed for his life, Captain and mess boy alike. They actually rowed a hundred miles in a little more than two days—this in spite of the fact that most of the crew were unaccustomed to such heavy work, and suffered accordingly. Night and day we were at it, stopping for an hour or two in the middle of the night on some island to make a cup of tea; otherwise we had little time to eat or sleep.

When our worn crew arrived at Akkarnek there was no steamer in sight. We had no guarantee that the trading ship would arrive, and after a few days of waiting, we began to prepare for the long journey in open boats down the dangerous west coast of Hudson Bay. There was little hope of getting all the men out alive on such a terrible journey as this. We had little provisions, and even if we had had enough for such a trip, we could not have stored it in our small boats. Besides, we should have had to make a landing every time there was a gale, and probably we should have lost our boats and our provisions in attempting a landing among all those shallows, rocks and reefs. I know of many people, both Eskimos and whites, who have lost their lives in boat journeys along this coast. In fact, it was on this very coast that I had been wrecked with my Eskimo crew in the Fall of 1913. Luckily at that time there were plenty of deer, so there was no danger of starvation, but this past year about seventy Eskimos died along this coast on account of scarcity of deer.

During the anxious and uncertain days of waiting for the ship, I overheard many a pathetic conversation between the members of my crew. One night while taking a walk, I heard one man say to another while stumbling and picking himself up among all the huge rocks and boulders in this desolate country, "say, wouldn't the Statue of Liberty look good to you now?"

But the ship finally arrived, and we considered our troubles at an end. Three weeks later we reached St. John's, Newfoundland. Most of us looked so terrible that even the Newfoundlanders, who are accustomed to strange sights, turned to stare at us in the streets. For me, at least, neither our appearance nor the hardships we experienced could be compared with the regret I felt at the sudden termination of the expedition, which made it impossible for me to accomplish what I had set out to do.

The first time I was wrecked I had no one to be responsible for, as I was sailing a small craft with an Eskimo crew. The ship which had brought me

A number of years ago the director of the Museum was asked what was the one great treasure among its many. He answered that it was the wonderful old Etruscan chariot in bronze, the only complete one in the world. It is a magnificent triumphal affair and was found in the tomb of the hero who once rode proudly in it through the streets of ancient Rome. The chariot still occupies a first place among the treasures, but it must share honors with the Morgan Raphael, the "Colonna Madonna," which hangs facing the main staircase, in the place of honor among all the paintings. The "Madonna Enthroned with Saints" was painted by Raphael, when he was little more than a boy, for the Convent of St. Antony of Padua. From that time it had a long and interesting history, until it came into the hands of the late J. Pierpont Morgan and was sent to this country in 1912 with a number of paintings from the banker's London home. The value of the picture is not only in its beauty and charm, but that it is no longer possible to obtain a Raphael. The works of others of the great masters might come on the market, but Raphaels are all in museums.

Madonna Enthroned With Saints, Painted in 1504-05 by Raphael at the Age of 21.

The Egyptian Tomb of Perneb, with its different chambers of stone, its inscriptions and decorations, lifted in its entirety from the country of the Nile and set up in the Museum, a feat which even the museum at Cairo has not attempted, is one of the great features of the Egyptian department. There, too, is the tiny cedar statuette of King Sesostris I., wearing the crown of Lower Egypt, still showing the color of wonderful Egyptian red. Near by are the great wall reliefs from the Temple of Rameses I. completed by his son, Seto.

Just arrived in this country, delayed by the war since 1914, are the black granite figures of the lion-headed war goddess Sekhmet. King Amenhotep erected a temple in Karnak, where he placed a [illegible] statues, more than half a hundred. He was a man of peace and placed them there to appease the war goddess. Seven of them have been presented to the Museum by Henry Walters.

Bashford Dean, Curator of Armors and Armor, has double starred only one piece in the Museum's armor collection, the magnificent casque made by the famous Milanese armorer Negroli for that French King of many interests, Francis I.

The late Empress Dowager of China considered the pair of Chun flowerpots worthy of a place beside her throne in the Forbidden City to hold the flowers from her garden. Near this is India's contribution, the finest of the Museum's wood carvings, a small room with domed ceiling.

In tapestries the Museum has a rich collection, including the famous Brussels tapestry of 1500, with the cartoon by Jan van Room. Unlike most such tapestries, it is signed. It is a lovely thing in color and fineness of weave as well as in the beauty of its design.

The Metropolitan Museum has, of course, many paintings of the Madonna and Child in different forms, and much sculpture from old chapels and churches. Pons de Goutaut, the French Seigneur de Biron, in 1495 obtained the permission of the Pope to erect a private two-story chapel at the Château de Biron. To the lower floor was admitted the public, and above the family worshipped. Here were lovely masterpieces of Gothic sculpture. The Entombment, a monumental work,

THE DANGEROUS AGE

The value of periodic health examinations for men and women

Would you be willing to sign your own death warrant at 45 or 57?

Few people would.

Middle age is the dangerous age.

It is the time when a man or woman has gone through the period of trial and error and is ready to make use of a rich store of experience, observation, training and thought.

But before reaching this fruitful age, nearly half the human race have already perished, and many of those who are left are on the edge of the grave.

Yet there is recoup for [illegible] such figures. The Nation is waking up to the need of conserving the health and the lives of its citizens.

When we learn how to keep the body constantly in the pink of condition, that period from 45 to 70 should become the golden, and not the dangerous, age.

Here at the Life Extension Institute we examine thousands of men and women yearly.

We are particularly gratified by the number of women who come to us for examinations.

It is important, of course, that men keep their health, because men are the wage earners and on them depends the financial up-keep of the family.

Yet women occupy a place no less important. Particularly where there are children, the mother's health is a vital factor.

There is no greater tragedy than the death of a mother of young children. It clouds the home with a shadow that the years can never dispel.

Our records show many instances of the value of a periodic health examination in preventing disease, or checking it before it gets too great a start.

We quote one instance from our daily routine:

In July, 1918, Mrs. O., a woman of 57, came to the Institute declaring that, without knowing the cause, she was rapidly losing her health and was suffering from weakness, nervousness, vertigo and headaches.

Our examination revealed a high blood pressure and a bad acting heart. Mrs. O. had been totally unaware of this condition—other than its effects.

The Institute counseled her with regard to her condition and activities and convinced her of the need of securing medical supervision by her own physician.

Ten months later (in April, 1919), when Mrs. O. returned to the Institute for a check-up, a most gratifying change had taken place. The pulse beat had dropped from 132 to 88 and the symptoms of dizziness and nervousness had disappeared. Mrs. O. was in excellent condition—far younger than her years.

In ten months' time the patient had converted a condition of impending breakdown into one of comfortable health. It is an inspiring thing to follow such a quick right-about-face. As the old Spanish proverb puts it: "Glorious virtue is in the robbing of death."

Remember this one important fact about disease:

Like anything else, it has its beginnings. It must start somewhere. It develops quickly or slowly according to your daily living habits and your resistance.

Disease spreads like fire. Discover it before it gets too great a start and it can be quickly stamped out. Ignore it—and the winds of time fan it to a conflagration beyond control.

A periodic health examination at the Life Extension Institute may be not only the means of checking disease and adding years to your life, but it will make life better worth the living.

Your interest in good health will be stimulated. You will take a keen joy in keeping fit. You will have fewer bad days. The sun will shine brighter. You will live your life to the fullest.

Instead of wondering just where you stand in regard to health and disease—you will KNOW. And in the knowing you will realize the folly of your fears.

How many people worry themselves into ill-health when there is really nothing the matter with them!

How many are taking patent nostrums for some imaginary ill, while all the time disease is making headway unchecked in another direction!

The Life Extension Institute was established by a group of scientists, publicists, and business men, who desired to provide a self-supporting Central Institution of national scope devoted to the science of increasing human happiness and efficiency and preventing human misery and inefficiency—a responsible and authoritative source from which the public might draw knowledge and inspiration in avoiding needless sickness and premature death.

A provision has been made for the utilization of a substantial portion of the dividends in public health work, under the trusteeship of ex-President William Howard Taft and Professor Irving Fisher. Two-thirds of the common stock is held in trust by Mr. Taft and Professor Fisher for this purpose.

The Life Extension Institute works hand-in-hand with the highest ideals of modern, scientific medicine. It is irrevocably opposed to fads and quacks and charlatans.

The Institute gives to all its members appropriate hygienic guidance and instruction, but does not include medical or surgical treatment in its service. If the impairments found are serious, the member is told of the need of medical, surgical or dental attention, and is informed of the type of treatment that would be most advantageous.

The Life Extension Institute has a Hygiene Reference Board of one hundred leading scientific men, including the Surgeons-General of the Army (retired) and Navy, and U. S. Public Health Service, several ex-Presidents of the American Medical Associations, Commissioners of Public Health, and others interested in public welfare. A complete list will be furnished on application.

The Institute's Health Service consists of an intensive physical examination of the whole body, together with quarterly chemical and microscopic examinations of the urine, review of the member's personal and family history, daily living habits and health problems, extensive detailed reports, hygienic guidance, monthly health journals, etc. The fee for this service is $15 yearly.

It makes no difference where you live. In addition to its staff of twenty examining physicians in the Head Office in New York, the Life Extension Institute has more than 6,000 Examining Physicians located in principal cities throughout the United States and Canada.

The Institute has its own pathological laboratory and X-Ray Department. Thousands of tests are made here monthly—both for our own members and for outside physicians.

Examinations of subscribers who live in New York and vicinity are made at the Head Office of the Institute, 25 West Forty-fifth Street—on appointment by telephone or letter—between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M., also evenings, 7 P. M. to 9 P. M.

Convenient appointments can also be arranged with the Institute's examiners in the member's home district or city. Women physicians are available at the main office for the examination of women members who prefer them.

A coupon is printed below for the convenience of those desiring further information about the Life Extension Institute and the tremendous good it is doing in the great national movement to prolong human life.

Exhibitions Opening This Week

Art at Home and Abroad

"Girl with a Book," by Leon Kroll. (In the Exhibition of the Society of Painters, Sculptors and Gravers at the Gimpel & Wildenstein Galleries.)

THE most significant innovation for which the new Society of Painters, Sculptors and Gravers makes itself responsible is the inclusion in the society and its exhibitions of artists working chiefly or wholly in pastel, water color or black and white. The classification of art as more or less important according to the medium used by the artist is, of course, an absurdity, but it is a deep-rooted absurdity and cannot be dislodged from the public mind without much labor.

The attitude of the young society in this particular cannot therefore be too highly praised. Not until we achieve the acumen of Le Brun under the astute Colbert and give our painters and sculptors seats at the same table with not only engravers and decorative painters, but wood carvers and metal workers and weavers and dyers, shall we have an art that is whole and sound.

The younger artists are swinging back toward love of the lighter mediums, and much of the best work of the modern school is done in black and white. The exhibition now open at the Gimpel & Wildenstein Galleries contains work by Elie Nadelman, Boardman Robinson, Albert Sterner, John Sloan, Mahonri Young, Rockwell Kent, Maurice Sterne and others who have found their liveliest expression in the art of the point. No one form of expression precludes another. Rembrandt was not less a great artist in his paintings than in his incomparable etchings, but certainly he was no greater. It will be a very wholesome thing not only for the artists but for the public to see drawings and water colors play their part in the notable exhibitions of the year and watch them thrive on the nourishing diet of public demand.

The sculptors in the society also have their chance to do something for the art of exhibition in their particular field. Most of them are members of the Academy—Paul W. Bartlett, Chester Beach, A. Stirling Calder, Paul Manship, Andrew O'Connor, and Mahonri Young—men representing many shades of thought and methods of discipline, but men with authority upholding the steadily growing reputation of American sculpture for true originality and force. If as members of the new society they can initiate exhibition reforms that will enable them with others to show their work not only in the open air when it is designed for gardens and public spaces, but to show it in an environment that has been treated in the spirit of landscape architecture, and has been made to provide an organic design into which the individual exhibits shall fit with regard to its architectural character, then something will have been done to release the public from the bondage of a false idea of exhibition art. It is not less splendid to provide a landscape setting that shall be an outdoor gallery for sculpture than to build a gallery of stone or brick, and it is not less difficult. It would be a task to inspire a landscape architect with enthusiasm, and the gain to exhibiting sculptors would be immeasurable.

Such tests as these will prove the real advantage to the community of the splitting up of the old organization. New occasions teach new duties as they did when Lowell made the line for our conveniences, and the exhibition world calls loudly for the solution of many problems extremely difficult to solve under the housing and other conditions of New York. But if these problems are met with the fresh courage of innovators they may yield.

The special note in the memorial exhibition of Frederic Crowninshield's work opening tomorrow at the Brooklyn Museum of Art is that of warm, bright gayety and pleasure in the scene depicted. Mr. Crowninshield saw his Italy as a country to be enjoyed and loved, and he has recorded none of her more sombre aspects. The white statues and blonde architecture are flooded or dappled with sunlight, and the background is the blue of the Italian sky and sea. Even the Roman cypresses are less forbidding under his caressing brush than they appear in the work of any other painter. In his use of his medium he was, of course, skillful. His oil colors are lightly applied, and the effect is not lacking in vibration, although the more modern methods of the impressionists have been ignored. His water colors are both free and precise, and have a clean purity that suits the medium. In decorative design he was singularly fortunate, and one cannot but regret that during his later years so little of his work in this field was done in America. The sprightly interplay of color in the different parts of the composition in three little panels shown in the present exhibition, the natural pose and gesture in figures monumentally grouped, and the great beauty of the landscape background, exert a powerful appeal, even in this slight preliminary sketch for some large undertaking.

There is a marked difference between such an early study as the recumbent figure of 1880—the panel is entitled "Sweetér to gaze and dream than toil"—and the Capri subjects of recent years; a difference corresponding to that between youth and middle life, only with Mr. Crowninshield's art time has worked backward, and the paintings of a date very near to that of his death have the spontaneity and blithe color that we naturally associate with first impressions and young emotions.

In both the early and late work the mental poise and sensitive restraint of the artist are apparent—characteristics lending themselves admirably to interpretation of the Sicilian landscape, which occupies a dominant place in the exhibition, and especially to interpretation of classic architecture. The architectural features in his composition seldom are permitted to overshadow the natural setting in which they are placed. In very few of the canvases do we feel that the architecture is the picture. But wherever it occurs it is definite in its intellectual appeal, and clearly an expression through art of man's joy in his surroundings and his power over them. The artist has seized the spirit of classic architecture, instead of being content with an imitative reproduction. In the notation of minor ornament there is the same tact and freedom as in the lovely water color drawing of the well at Certosella, Capri, with its delicate superstructure.

It is a very beautiful exhibition, less for any powerful affirmation of genius or even of extraordinary achievement than for the unity and logic of the collection as a whole. It celebrates a warmly sympathetic temper of mind, and communicates a sense of well being to even the most casual observer. The Brooklyn public is fortunate in having it for the month of November, after which it will go to other cities.

One of the early November exhibitions of prints is that at the Milch Galleries of the work of William Meyerowitz, shown with paintings by his wife, formerly Theresa Bernstein. Mr. Meyerowitz is at once conservative and free. He is fond of using a light crisp line playing caressingly over his subject in a way that suggests Mr. Bacher's description of Whistler's way of making his etched lines "feel like air against solids." He knows the value of open spaces and has a nice sense of scale, seldom letting himself incumber a plate with forms too large for its dimensions. The "Knitting" is perhaps the one exception, and here the absorbed expression on the ugly big face and the expressiveness of the knitter's hands compensate for the sense of being too close to the figure that is communicated by the size of the latter. "The Old Rabbi" is an example of the artist at his best, and "The Talmudists," although it reveals certain weaknesses in the construction of the figures, is full of life and quiet, kindly humor. In the plate, "At the Pulpit," the position of the figure is particularly fortunate, giving without explanatory detail the feeling of the reader elevated above his audience and dominating them.

One idiosyncrasy of composition which is not in the least a mannerism, but a flexible and charming characteristic, is the introduction of very small figures, either in the background or as accessories to the more prominent features of a scene. In the delicate little plate, "On the Hudson," these little figures have individuality and animation, each is interesting in itself, and none intrudes upon the sensitive pence of the lovely place as the artist has interpreted it. In the "Gossipers" they establish a cross current of healthy activity to the slovenly idleness of the bench crowd that is kept in the background, but wakes itself felt.

with figures wonderfully carved, and the Pieta are two of them which have come to New York. A Spanish retable of the fifteen century from an archiepiscopal palace is carved entirely from alabaster. In the same gallery is a lovely Nativity Group, in painted terra cotta, each figure separate—a sweet-faced mother, the reclining Babe, St. Joseph, the Ox and the Ass.

In the Altman collection all of the thirteen Rembrandts are double starred as one lot—it is impossible to choose between them, but the "Old Woman Cutting Her Nails," with its wonderful lights and color, is at least popularly considered the finest. Memling's "Betrothal of St. Catherine" in the same collection has a great charm. Margaret Wyatt, Lady Lee, is a wonderfully strong portrait by Holbein. Luca Della Robbia has contributed a lovely Madonna and Child, in enamelled terra cotta of glistening white. The Mother and Child by Donatello is in terra cotta, painted and gilded. Rossellino has a marble relief of the same subject.

Among the Italian paintings is a great Bellini, one of the loveliest of his pictures of the Madonna and Child. Another Italian, the Venetian painter Carpaccio, represents a different extreme of art in his forceful "Meditation on the Passion." There are two Vermeers, one in the Altman collection and another given many years ago by Henry Marquand.

"Madam Charpentier and Her Children" is a beautiful early painting by Renoir; the mother is in black, the two little girls in pale blue, one sitting upon a dog. The expression on the face of the mother, the brilliant background, the introduction of still life, are all distinctive. Manet's paintings are double starred in a group. Among these the "Boy with the Sword" is best known. Millet's "Sower" is one of the great pictures of the world. The Museum has two portraits of George Washington by Stuart. Eight decorative wall paintings by Hubert Robert are double starred together, all of them gay, brilliant and typically French.

There is a wondrous collection of furniture, the Metropolitan having been the first museum to specialize in early Americana. The prize treasure of the cabinetmaker's art, however, is a recent addition, a wonderful desk which belonged to Louis XVI., with secret keyholes and two little central doors, which the King might open to speak to his secretary, who shared the desk from the rear. A superb tree carpet is the one rug which is marked among the super-excellent.

If the Museum had starred its unrivaled collections as such, that of the lace would be one. Even in the lace-making countries there is none equal to it. The collection of musical instruments also is extraordinary. The Cesnola collection of antiquities from Cyprus is unequaled in the world. Also one sees the unique Roman glass display, with the colors of hundreds of rainbows, and the jade collection, which has treasures not to be found outside China. Four collections of small articles which are of the greatest rarity and doubled starred are Byzantine ivories, translucent Cloisonne enamels on gold and silver, thirteenth century Limoges enamels, and French ivories of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

THE FORMER GERMAN EMPEROR, WILHELM II., TAKING HIS MORNING WALK ALONG THE MOST SECLUDED PATH IN THE FORMAL GARDENS OF THE BENTINCK CASTLE, AT AMORENGEN, Accompanied by Adjutant General Dommes, the Photograph Showing the Remarkable Changes in Face and Figure of the Exiled Monarch, Including Untrimmed Mustache, White Vandyke Beard, and Long, Whitened Hair; With Sack Suit, Felt Hat, and Walking Stick Replacing the Brilliant Uniform and Shining Sword of the One-Time German War Lord.

They Bring Writing Freedom to the World

Writing freedom has come to the world in the form of Eversharp, the always-sharp-never-sharpened pencil, and in Tempoint, the pen with the tempered point.

EVERSHARP has two million users. It is as much a pencil for women as for men. And because of its clean writing and great economy, large concerns everywhere are making it the official pencil in their establishments.

Eversharp carries enough lead for a quarter million words. It is as beautiful to the eye as it is good in the hand. Has a renewable eraser and a built-in pocket clip. A writing friend for life.

TEMPOINT has a wonderful hand-hammered gold pen that cannot become "sprung" under hard continuous writing, nor weakened by harmful ink acids. It also has the famous Comb Feed by which the ink-flow is automatically and exactly controlled under all writing conditions.

A further and exclusive Tempoint advantage is the scientific Handwriting Chart which shows all styles of handwriting, and by means of which you can find readily the particular Tempoint Pen that writes like you. This does away with the old-time rule-of-thumb-method of uncertain pen selection. Every Tempoint dealer has this Chart.

Eversharp Pencils and Tempoint Pens are made in various lengths—for pocket, chain, or lady's bag. The pens are made in both screw-joint and self-filling styles. Eversharp prices are $1 and up. Tempoint prices are $2.50 and up. Sold by better dealers everywhere.

NUCOA

Butters Bread—Stays Sweet

YOU cannot appreciate the deliciousness of Nucoa as a spread for bread until you have actually tried this appetizing nut butter on your own table.

Nucoa is as sweet as a nut—as delicious as the choicest creamery butter—more nutritious than the latter—and yet costs less than half its price.

The rich creamy meat of the coconut gives its substance to Nucoa. It is churned with pasteurized milk under most sanitary conditions and comes fresh to you in clean waxed wrappers that absolutely protect it for your table.

The economy of Nucoa is very important, but its exceptional butteriness and nutritive value have determined its popularity.

HOUSE SURGERY

Why Destroy When You Can Conserve?

BEFORE AFTER

WE redeem architectural monstrosities. We make beautiful, livable and practical, houses that have become eyesores to their owners and the neighbors. We will take a house that the owner has entirely given up hope of enjoying himself or finding a buyer for and readily convert this liability into an asset. Old houses often contain better lumber and other building materials and more conscientious workmanship than can be had today, therefore, it is not only economical to conserve old houses, but often a positive advantage. To enjoy your house next summer you must act immediately, as price tendencies are upward, not downward.

The illustrations published herewith have to do with an actual remodeling of a house in one of the exclusive suburban sections of the East.

Send for further particulars and for a copy of our illustrated booklet B, "Before and After"

Little Partners of Fashion—TENEO SNAPS

THE charm of a gown is in the perfection of its details. And most important of all essential little items are the fasteners. The duty of holding each seam in its proper place, the responsibility for snugly fitting, gracefully clinging lines, is theirs. The very style of the costume itself depends upon them.

It is with a full realization of the important part they are to play that Teneo Snaps are made. Each little spring holds tightly until released. Each edge is rounded to prevent thread cutting. Safe—sure—dependable Teneo Snaps are invariably used on the most effective costumes. They are faithful guardians of graceful lines.

Chocolate creamed with milk just as the Swiss do it

Pure, delicious—of course, your youngsters love it!

OFF for a strenuous afternoon, playing, walking, hiking—and dinner four hours away! Of course, the thoughts of your High School youngsters turn to Peter's as they come flying out of school.

The crisp, fresh fragrance of blended chocolate, the creamy flavor of rich milk, the nibbly goodness of toasted almonds—they could not find a more delicious food.

And it's sustaining, it really satisfies! Peter's helps supply the energy they must have. On the go every minute, they use up energy as fast as they make it. They need a food that really stays by them.

Milk, fresh, heavy with cream! Chocolate specially selected—chocolate actually twice as nourishing as the same weight of white bread—in the smallest bar of Peter's, your youngsters get a fuel value of 220 calories.

After school tomorrow let them have Peter's. Let them get the sweet that you know is as wholesome as it is delicious.

They can get Peter's Milk Chocolate—plain and almond bars—at any drug or grocery store, at news-stands and candy shops.

Schools and Institutions

Over two hundred thousand Public School children see Pathescope Educational Pictures every week through the equipment of only one hundred of the New York Public Schools.

All schools need and should have them.

Many now used and more needed by the Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, Social Settlement Workers, Parents Associations, Industrial Welfare Societies, Orphan Asylums, Convalescent Homes, Sanitariums—everywhere that life can be made better worth living by the safe use of wholesome motion pictures.

Industrial Users

We number among our clients the most prominent manufacturers using motion pictures as an aid to salesmanship. "Battling Against a Human Vampire!"

What was this mysterious thing that made monsters out of innocent girls—that made every mother clutch her baby to her breast in nameless terror? What was it that drew strong men trembling into the realm of the Un-dead—those pitiful creatures who no longer live, but who are deprived of even the kindness of death?

Jonathan Harker started to Transylvania on an everyday business trip. What did it mean when he neared the end of his journey when the peasants pressed around him begging him to go no farther? Why did one woman press into his hand a rosary and another a crucifix?

What was this thing—darker than his wildest fears had ever dared imagine—more terrible than a woman's shriek at midnight—more baffling than crouching madness in a sick brain?

What it was you can learn from one of the classic mystery and adventure tales to which thousands have thrilled—one of the great host of the world's best adventure stories in

ELLEN GLASGOW, ALFRED OLLIVANT, WALPOLE

Works of Fiction by Many Well-Known Novelists Among the Important Books Published This Week

THE BUILDERS. By Ellen Glasgow. Doubleday, Page & Co.

It is not Ellen Glasgow's custom to turn out a novel every six months or so, and an interval of no less than three years has intervened between the publication of "Life and Gabriella" and the appearance of this latest novel, "The Builders." As might be expected, "The Builders," though by no means a war book, is very emphatically a war-time story—which is what every novel must be that is not purely fantastic nor concerned with a period more or less apart in thought and feeling as in time from the present day. The war has an effect upon the external activities, upon the minds and upon the destinies of all the more important characters. For one or two, it opens a way of escape from situations which have become intolerable, and, at the very last, it is his conviction of the personal responsibility resting upon every American to render America worthy of the dead who died believing in America" which helps Blackburn to make his great decision and his great sacrifice.

The book, however, is essentially a character novel; not for a moment does it depend upon plot for any of its interest. In fact, by the end of the first chapter the general outline of the "story" and its two possible endings are perfectly clear to any experienced and discerning reader. But this does not mean that the novel is uninteresting; on the contrary, it holds one's attention firmly, save, perhaps, toward the close, where there is rather more theorizing than seems necessary, and the book drags a trifle in consequence, besides suffering from the temporary loss of its most interesting personality. Though the plot is both familiar and obvious, there is so much cleverness and skill and ingenuity shown in its handling, and one in particular of the characters is so very well drawn, that the question of what is going to happen next is none the less absorbing because the general outline of the plot is evident. This particular character, the one whose devices and manipulations and manoeuvres are of such interest, is not the heroine, Caroline Meade, but Anna Jeannette—who preferred to be and usually was called Angelica—Blackburn, the wife of David Blackburn, who had made a fortune by discovering "some new cheap process" in the manufacture of steel. To attempt to describe Angelica would be to spoil her and to rob the reader of the opportunity to follow Miss Glasgow's gradual and subtle revelation of her character, a character deftly presented in its every aspect and phase. Drawn at full length, with an abundance of exquisite and carefully wrought detail, hers is a portrait which, in its completeness, its admirable rounding out, is worthy to stand beside any other in Miss Glasgow's gallery—that of the lovely and unforgettable Virginia always excepted. She dominates the novel, and when toward the end her actual presence is withdrawn—though never the influence of her personality—the lack of her is keenly felt.

We see Angelica Blackburn, as we do all the characters and all the events of the book, through the eyes of Caroline Meade, a heroine very closely akin to the conquering Gabriella. So entirely is the reader's knowledge bounded by that of Caroline, that the story might almost have been related by her in the first person. She is a woman 32 years old, fine and strong and lovable, who has fought her way through tragedy and emerged therefrom with a hard-won cheerfulness and a philosophy of life partly expressed in the phrase, "People can't hurt you unless you let them," before the book opens. She is a Virginian, well born, well bred and poor, one of the four daughters of an incurably optimistic mother, whose own hard life had not abated her courage one jot. After the terrible thing happened which laid Caroline's happiness in ruins at her feet, she had become a trained nurse, and it is while she is at home on a brief vacation that the story opens with the coming of a letter offering her a position in the house of David and Angelica Blackburn, whose one little daughter, Letty, a very delicate child, has some sort of spinal trouble and is in need of the most skillful and faithful sort of care. Caroline accepts the offer, and her experiences at Briarley, the Blackburns' splendid place just outside of Richmond, occupy all but a comparatively small portion of the book.

It is in the early Autumn of 1916 that Caroline goes to Briarley. The national election was approaching when "both parties avoided the direct issue, and sought by compromise and concession to secure the support of the non-American groups." But there were Americans who had realized from the very beginning that this was in very truth "America's war," and [illegible] was, too, one of those Virginians who believed that "the urgent need in America was for unity," that because of this need sectional boundaries must be forgotten and the "solid South" become a thing of the past. These political views of his brought him some friends and many enemies, but they are not very closely interwoven with the fabric of the story until the end is in sight, when his viewpoint and his ideals become predominating factors, and show a good deal of clear and conscientious thinking on the part of the author—and yet, perhaps because one feels that he is to a very great extent Miss Glasgow's mouthpiece, he is the least real and the least human among the varied personalities of a book in which nearly all the characters are very real and very much alive.

There is indeed scarcely one of them who does not deserve comment, from the bluntly honest Mrs. Timberlake, whose shrewd remarks do so much for the enlivening of the story, to that shallow yet charming little gossip, Daisy Colfax. As for the style, those who are familiar with Miss Glasgow's work do not need to be told of the sheer beauty of her writing. Many of the descriptions in this latest novel—descriptions never permitted to become overlong—are especially sure and fine. There is one of an October afternoon at Briarley when "all the noise and movement of life seemed hushed and waiting while nature drifted slowly into the long sleep of Winter," which is among the many one would like to quote in full. "The Builders" is a shorter and a smaller novel than either "Virginia" or "Life and Gabriella." It has less of variety, less of scope. It is confined far more closely within bounds both of time and space and locality; no one of the characters is, like Virginia herself at once an individual and the perfect embodiment [illegible] follow the development of any one of them as we did that of Gabriella. We meet them when they are already full grown; what they were at the beginning of the story, that they essentially are at the end, despite the broader acceptance of sacrifice they have learned from the war. But though not so big a book as either of its two predecessors, "The Builders" is an interesting one, full of a splendid courage, a high and fine idealism. There is a spiritual victory won against heavy odds, and this, the supreme force of the free and courageous spirit, is the note which rings through the book again and yet again, and culminates in its plea of individual responsibility for the maintenance of those ideals which are at once the meaning and the soul of America.

TWO MEN

TWO MEN. By Alfred Ollivant. Doubleday, Page & Co.

The extremely beautiful, extremely innocent and extremely high-minded country maiden who falls very much in love with a man of wealth and station superior to her own and ultimately becomes his "victim," has been a more or less popular character in fiction for very many years. In Mr. Ollivant's new novel, "Two Men," she reappears once more, as beautiful, innocent, high-minded and loving as ever, pure white in contrast to the unalloyed blackness of the villain, Captain Royal. His father had made money and so enabled the son to go to Harrow and then into the Army, but Captain Royal was not a gentleman born, and he also lacked "the almost divine simplicity" of the rustic. This divine simplicity was possessed in abundance by Ernie Caspar, whose father, however, was descended on the female side from the Beauregards, inheriting [illegible] and weakness, and passing these down to Ernie, the elder of his sons, while the other, Alf, had the strong will and ambition of his mother, a woman of the people. Ernie was popular, but he was lazy and without ambition, and so was serving "the Ogre of whom the Socialists spoke; Capitalism incarnate, stripped of its Church-trimmings, the Monster remorseless and obscene" as the boots on the Third Floor—Mr. Ollivant has a fondness for capitals—of the Hohenzollern Hotel at Beachbourne when he met Ruth Boam, a chambermaid in this same somewhat pe-

ROMAIN ROLLAND WRITES A CHARMING ROMANCE OF LIFE IN BURGUNDY

COLAS BREUGNON. By Romain Rolland. Translated by Katherine Miller. New York: Henry Holt & Co.

There is something especially gratifying in finding at last a piece of fiction written by a European that is wholesome, vivid with the joy of life, in love with the sunshine and with work and play and trees and birds and tools and people. So many novels voicing the dreariness and weariness of life, jaded, synical, and sneering, have come out of the various countries of Europe that American readers, with their brighter, more hopeful, and more youthful outlook upon life, have come to expect that kind of perverse and unwholesome picture from modern European writers, whatever the period of which they write. So accustomed to that point of view have they become that "Colas Breugnon" will be as surprising to them as it is delightful. It is true that the life it deals with is that of three hundred years ago, but it is good to find pictured such a character as old Colas, with his gay and sane outlook upon life, no matter in what period of the world's history he is placed.

The story recounts the life of Colas Breugnon, carpenter and woodworker in a village of Burgundy, through a year or more, in his own language. As he writes he glances back over the fifty years he has covered, and remembers events and scenes in which he took joy at the time. He describes his work and his pleasure in it, his family, his surroundings, narrates some of his daily doings, tells of important events in the village life. And always he is gay, happy, good-natured, full of laugher and jest, so bubbling with delight in living, seeing, working, in whatever the day may bring forth, that his pleasure irradiates all that he writes. He loves his food and his wine, and he gets drunk occasionally, and this, too, he enjoys. He loves everything out of doors, sunshine and rain, birds, grass, trees, the soil of Mother Earth, and to be in intimate touch with them gives him keen pleasure. He loves his little grandchild and his daughter and, in less measure, his sons, and he talks and jests and laughs with them all. He does not love his wife and never has, but he feels for her respect and compassion and friendliness, and in his restrospective moods he tells the story of why he married her and why he did not marry the girl of his youthful choice. But most of all he loves his work, with tools and hands and sensitive touch, upon wood. It would be difficult to find anywhere a more graphic and more truthfully revealing depiction of the pleasure which the sane-minded worker can take in his work than old Colas Breugnon sets down now and then in the course of his story about himself. He is full always of the joy of doing good work, and his satisfaction in it frequently breaks out in his narrative. "To work after a good drink," he sums it up on one occasion, "and drink after good work, is my idea of a fine life!"

He is a philosopher, too, and he makes to himself many sane and wise observations, the basis of them being usually his own satisfaction in life, the world and himself.

> I see (he says) all sorts of useless grumblers around me; they say I have picked out a queer time to shout in, that we are in a sad state now; but no state is sad, there are only dreary people, and I am not one of them, the Lord be praised! * * * The future is yours, my sons—but I like it better where I am, it is safer on the whole, and how can I be sure that wine will be as good in four centuries from now? * * * Blessed be the day when I saw the light! How many glorious things there are on this round ball, things which smile at you, and taste sweet. Life is good, by the Lord! I always hunger for more, no matter how much I stuff myself. I give you my word, my mouth fairly waters before the feast spread for me by the earth and the sun.

Something of poet in [illegible]rit he is also, and so keen is his [illegible] that it gives him power of expres[illegible]especially when the beauties of that[illegible]t spread by the earth and the sun" has inspired him. Toward the end of his narrative misfortunes befall him, the plague sweeps the region and he falls ill of it, his beloved granddaughter almost dies, there are riots in the course of which much of the town is burned, he suffers a serious accident, his old wife dies. But through it all he keeps his gay good humor, his love of a joke, his pleasure in living and working, his philosophical habit of mind. And at the end he declares: "The only fault I have to find with this good life of ours is that it is too short. I don't feel as if I had had my money's worth, and, though I may be told that I ought to be satisfied with what has fallen to my lot, I can only say that I should like to have more, a second slice of cake, if I could get it without making too much fuss."

The story is as different from "Jean-Christophe" as one color is different from another, and the author explains in a little foreword that he wrote it in the reaction following the completion of the previous work, when he "felt an absolute need of something gay, in the true Gallic spirit." He had gone to his native place in Burgundy for the first time since his youth, and contact with the soil, he says, "roused all the Colas Breugnons under my skin, so that I was forced to speak for them." At any rate, M. Rolland has created a new and vital and most amusing and interesting character, of a sort that modern life very greatly needs to read about, that most healthily minded readers will find lovable and delightful. The book was written before the war and was printed and ready to appear, but was held back until the conflict was ended. "The grandchildren of Colas Breugnon," he says, "have just emerged as heroes or victims of a bloody epic, only to show an unquenchable flame to the world." And M. Rolland's book shows that their courage and spirit and undaunted souls were no new thing, but a part of that which is and has been France through all the centuries.

cular and fairly notorious establishment. He fell in love with her, endeavored to save her from the wicked Captain Royal, and, though his efforts failed, sought her out at the last, agreed to regard her child as his own, and married her despite the interference of his brother Alf, who also wanted her—but not to marry.

The very long book begins before Ernie's birth, with the coming of weak-willed, indolent, drunken Edward Caspar to Beachbourne, where Mr. Trupp, the surgeon later to become famous, first met and befriended him. The rather slight story is told with a very great amount of detail, especially in its depiction of the relations between the two brothers, Alf and Ernie. "That deep-seated sense of competition and ineradicable jealousy that exists between members of a family" was aggravated in the case of these two brothers by the fact that while the elder, Ernie, was strong of body but weak of will and indolent, the younger, Alf, had a strong will thwarted by a puny body. "The boy was abnormal; his spirit dwarfed and stunted by the miserable tenement in which it was forced to dwell," until it became a thing of evil. In the early part of the novel, the reader rather expects that a good deal of interesting drama will develop from the antagonism between these two brothers, but none ever does. The book, in short, is one of those which are constantly disappointing one's expectation that they are sooner or later going to get somewhere. Mrs. Caspar, Ernie's mother, is its best drawn character.

JEREMY

JEREMY. By Hugh Walpole. George H. Doran Company.

IT would be difficult to find or even to imagine two books more totally unlike in theme and atmosphere and general effect than "Jeremy" and "The Secret City." Both, it is true, are artistic and admirably written, but apart from this there is nothing in common between the strange, enthralling story of revolutionary Russia and this entirely delightful tale of happy, healthy English childhood. One can sense the relief with which Mr. Walpole turned from the fevered ways of "The Dark Forest" to wander through the little cathedral town of Polchester and among the lanes and meadows and over the hills of Cornwall—we beg his pardon! Glebeshire — with that clean-minded, whole-hearted, sane and normal [illegible] Jeremy Cole.

The book is a simple, charming chronicle of the months in which Jeremy passed from babyhood to boyhood. It opens in December, on the morning of his eighth birthday, and closes in the September of the following year, when he goes away to school. He is a quiet, independent, imaginative little boy, warm hearted and well bred, not vicious in any way, but at times exceedingly naughty, and Mr. Walpole writes of him with mingled humor and tenderness and a complete understanding. The chapters which tell of the coming of unfortunate, neuralgic Miss Jones, the governess, and the climax of the absolutely fiendish treatment which the children meted out to her and which they called "teasing Miss Jones," are worth any number of solemn volumes on child-psychology. The working of the boy's mind, the sudden "new realization" of Miss Jones which came to him one eventful day and which he instantly imparted as best he could to Helen, his senior by a year, and Mary, who was as much his junior, is depicted in so convincing a way that one does not even dream of questioning its truth; it seems perfectly obvious—after Mr. Walpole has shown it to us. He is quite evidently one of those adults who have exceptionally clear and vivid memories of their own childhood, and, truth to tell, the reader cannot help wondering whether there is not a touch of autobiography in this story of Jeremy Cole. But Jeremy's experiences are very like those upon which many of us can look back. Who, for instance, does not remember the thrill of birthdays, the feeling that something very extraordinary is just around the corner, the exciting expectation of presents, with its alloy of shyness at thought of the necessary "thank yous" and dread of the inevitable kisses? Oh, that unavoidable kissing of aunts and uncles and cousins and other more or less alien grown-ups! Is there any one, boy or girl, who has not inwardly and with varying degrees of intensity objected to kissing and being kissed by various relations and family friends?

But it is not only in its birthdays and its too promiscuous kissings that Jeremy's childhood recalls to most of us our own. There are the naughtiness which so often seemed, somehow, quite involuntary and which one would have been so glad to avoid, the delight of starting off for the Summer vacation at the seashore, the first visit to the theatre, and that wonderful, wonderful event—the first time of being permitted to go out in the street alone. Whether one chanced to be one's self, city or country bred, these are thrills which never can be forgotten. Jeremy lived in an English cathedral town, with his father the rector; his serene mother, who was always right when the others were always wrong; his two sisters, Helen and Mary; his Uncle Samuel, who painted pictures no one ever bought and was "queer" and never seemed an especially worth-while person until the magical night of the Pantomime; and his aunt, Miss Amy Trefusis, whom he quite understandably and wholeheartedly hated. Besides these there was nurse, otherwise "the Jampot"—and how real she is, poor soul, and with what richness of humor and sympathy does Mr. Walpole tell of her departure!—and Miss Jones the governess, and last, but very far indeed from least, Hamlet. Hamlet was a dog, a grave and scornful dog, with a stump of a tail and an intelligence that was more than human and at times almost alarming. He adored Jeremy, and Jeremy adored him; which latter was the reason why Mary hated him.

Mary is very different from and every bit as interesting as Jeremy—a plain, near-sighted, delicate, very clever and very reserved child, who fought out her battles by herself. At seven "she had the capacity for being hurt of a person of thirty," and she knew very well that she was awkward and plain. One knows that Mary is going to find life a very difficult business; but one also feels quite sure that she will become a thoroughly worth-while individual, a woman of brains and character. Mr. Walpole portrays her as well and as understandingly as he does Jeremy—which is saying a very great deal—and she, like Jeremy and indeed all the other characters in the book, has that vitality which gives the reader a conviction that they were alive before the book began, and will go on living after it ends. This is merely a particular part of their lives from which the author has drawn the curtain; he may let it fall again, but that does not affect them in the very least—it only limits our knowledge of them. Hamlet was not mistaken when he lay down upon the mat just inside the hall door to await Jeremy's return. He knew his master would come back—and so do we.

There is not a chapter in the book over which one is not [illegible] is the sort of volume which makes one chuckle at times, and at times smile a bit wistfully, and just occasionally sigh a little. It is a happy book, the story of a childhood untouched by the tragedy either of poverty or of great wealth, a childhood into which there never entered any devastating shock or grief. But there were sorrows and trials and one second of "frantic unreasoning terror" when Jeremy made his challenge to God, offering to give Him his dearly loved dog if He would not take one still more beloved. For Jeremy had heard the story of Abraham and Isaac, and his was the pitiless, rigid, and perfect logic of childhood. To say that the book is beautifully written is superfluous, Mr. Walpole's artistry being, of course, well known to all readers of THE BOOK REVIEW, yet one would like to comment just a little on the lovely and loving descriptions of the old stone house, and the long stretches of meadow where the primroses and daffodils grew, and Cow Farm, where in the further barn was the window from which you could see the sea, and the drowsy, pleasant little town of Polchester itself with the cathedral "so vast and majestic and quiet" gleaming through the trees, and the magic of the Fair. For those who know and love the country of which Mr. Walpole writes, the book will have an added fascination, but it is a book for all men and all women who have not forgotten that they, too, like Helen and Mary and Jeremy, were children once upon a time.

GERMAN SPIES AGAIN

THE BOX WITH BROKEN SEALS. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. With frontispiece. Little, Brown & Co.

THOSE who take up this new story expecting thrills and excitement are doomed to an abundance of disappointment, for, though during the last four or five years innumerable German spy stories have been published, stories representing almost every degree of interest and ingenuity, few of them have been at once so dull and so obvious as this tale of Mr. Oppenheim's. That reader must be stupid indeed who does not very quickly discover the whereabouts of the papers, so valuable

The Dickens Circle

By J. W. T. LEY, who has written a special Introduction for this new American edition.

Profusely Illustrated, 8vo, $6.00

"We hazard no extravagance when we say that the publication of this book is beyond all question the most interesting and important event in the annals of Dickensians since Forster's pages came from the press. No library on Dickens can hope to claim distinction, or even adequacy, without Ley."—News Leader, Richmond, Va.

"One gets to love all over again the incidents in Dickens' life; the discovery of sources of plots and characters; the identifications of friends with different ones in Dickens' books; the descriptions of gala parties and trips where genius is off guard; the quick response of men like Carlyle, the dyspeptic, of Francis Jeffrey, the autocratic critic, of Thackeray . . . Such is the feast Mr. Ley gives us out of the fullness of his knowledge of Boz."—The Bellman.

The New York Times calls it: "A volume which provides a vista of the men of letters of half a century ago, a vista down which it would be well for the strenuous souls of to-day to glance before parading their contempt for Victorian literature. There were giants in those days."

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

J. S. S.—I would like to be informed as to the name and author of poem in which the following lines occur:

He sleeps his last sleep, he has fought his last battle;
No sound can awake him to glory again.

The poem from which the lines are quoted is "The Grave of Bonaparte," which is attributed to Leonard Heath, but there is some doubt whether he wrote it. According, to Bartlett's Quotations the author is unknown, but in Volume VIII. of the World's Best Poetry, in which the poem is printed in full, Leonard Heath is given as the author. The poem is also printed in Coate's Fireside Encyclopedia of Poetry. It has been set to music by Lyman Heath, who has been credited with writing the poem.

"Somebody's Mother"

CHARLES H. HIBBS.—Will you be good enough to tell me where I may find the poem, also name of author and publisher, the first lines of which are as follows:

The woman was old and ragged and gray,
And bent with the chill of the Winter's day,
The streets were wet with the recent snow
And the woman's feet were aged and slow.

The poem quoted by our correspondent is "Somebody's Mother." It was originally published in the Macmillan Magazine, attributed to Mary D. Brine. It is printed in full in Heart Throbs, Volume II., published by the Chapple Publishing Company of Boston in Werner's Readings, No. 17, and in other collections of poetry.

Books

H. R. C.—Will you please tell me who is the author of a short poem about books, beginning:

There is no frigate like a book
To bear us leagues away.

The poem about which our correspondent inquires is by Emily Dickinson, and is printed in the third series of her poems, published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

The entire poem follows:

There is no frigate like a book
To take us lands away,
Nor any coursers like a page
Of prancing poetry.
This traverse may the poorest take
Without oppress of toll;
How frugal is the chariot
That bears a human soul.

Columbus

A. C. C.—Can you tell me the title and author of a poem on Columbus and his discovery which was written, I think, at the time of the four hundredth anniversary of his finding America, (1892?) It began:

"God help me," cried Columbus,
"Tho' fair or foul the breeze."

The poem about which our correspondent inquires is "Columbus," by Edna D. Proctor. It is also known as "Columbia's Banner," and is printed in "Our Country in Poem and Prose," by E. A. Persons, published by the American Book Company.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

PAULINE BAYER.—The poem asked for by "A. H." in THE BOOK REVIEW of Sept. 21 and beginning with the lines:

"We are quite sure
That He will give them back,"

is entitled "Recompense," written by George Klingle and published in illustrated booklet form by the Frederick A. Stokes Company of New York.

Information about this poem was also furnished by Mrs. H. A. Hempel, Auburn, N. Y.; J. H. Downey, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Emma C. Leininger, Brooklyn, N. Y.; J. W. Aycrigg, Stamford, Conn.; Margaret E. Lincoln's First Call

EDWIN W. FINGER.—In answer to inquiry of "C. M.," appearing in The Book Review Sept. 14, would say that a copy of Lincoln's first call for 75,000 volunteers, April 15, 1861, can be found in the American Cyclopedia for 1861, published by D. Appleton & Co.

The Journey's End

LAWRENCE.—In reply to the request of Elizabeth E. Clark in The Book Review of March 30, I inclose the poem by Clinton Scolland, "The Journey's End":

Climber, scaling the mountain high
Under the dawn or the sunset glow;
Pilgrims, patiently plodding by
Over the paths of the plain below;
Rider, faring or swift or slow,
Whatsoever the way you wend,
Happy your hearts if you can but know
Love awaits at the journey's end!

Sailor, under a stormy sky
Braving the wrath of the salt sea's flow;
Soldier, facing with fearless eye
The cheer and charge of the stubborn foe;
Rover, girt by the arctic snow
Where night and day in a blind wave blend,
Happy your hearts if you can but know
Love awaits at the journey's end!

Reaper or gleaner amid the rye
Hasting home when the day droops low;
Wanderer, lone where the deserts lie
With mirage lure that is goal for woe,
All who strive in the to and fro
Of life to meet what the fates may send,
Happy your hearts if you can but know
Love awaits at the journey's end!

ENVOY.

Mortals, while through the world you go,
Hope may succor and faith befriend,
Yet happy your hearts if you can but know,
Love awaits at the journey's end!

APPEALS TO READERS

F. H. J.—I wonder if any one can give me the line of a poem which appeared some years ago in a magazine—the story of the woman who wished on Saturday night that she was through with work—that she had her own home and children about her and wanted to die because she was tired—then on Monday morning cheerfully hustled out to work again, glad she had her job. I have tried to find this without success, as I do not know the name of it nor the correct first line.

Death's Long Sleep

L. A. B.—Who is the author of the following lines:

In death's long sleep,
Sweet friend sleep on;
Ere long I, too,
The shadowy land may tread.

A Lovelorn Microbe

FRANKLAND G. KIRKUFF.—Can any of your readers supply the entire poem of which the following is the first verse:

A lovelorn microbe met by chance,
At a swagger bacteroidal dance,
A proud baccillian belle, and she
Was first of the animalculae.
Of organisms saccharine,
She was the protoplasmic queen;
The microscopic pride and pet
Of the biological smartest set.

This verse headed an article in a morning paper about ten years ago, which gave an account of a meeting of medical men in New York.

Anzacs

CLIFFORD GORDON.—I would like to know where I can get the poem of which the following is a quotation, and who wrote it:

Oh, never on earth can men forget
The part the Anzacs played—
The cycle of years will come and go
But their fame shall never fade.

Love and Joy

M.—Will some of your readers be kind enough to tell me who wrote the following lines, and if they are complete:

O love and joy are for a day,
Then tears and sorrow after,
O love is for a Summer's day,
And then farewell to laughter.

If love and joy are for a day
And then farewell to laughter,
To live with love give me one day
Though tears forever after.

I believe Chadwick has set these lines to music.

"October"

SAMUEL J. NORTON.—Can any of your readers give the author and the rest of a poem entitled "October," the first verse of which is as follows:

October, O beautiful October,
Thou art with us again,
With the flush on thy brow
And the tiny finger's purple stain,
With thine amber-girdled vesture
And ruby-dotted train.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

A NEW novel by Robert Hichens, after an interval of two years or more since his last one, is announced for immediate publication by George H. Doran Company. It is called "Mrs. Marden," and its theme is spiritualism.

"Some Diversions of a Man of Letters" is the title of a new book by Edmund Gosse, promised for publication this month by the Scribners. Among its chapter headings are "The Agony of the Victorian Age," "The Future of English Poetry," "The Centenary of Edgar Allan Poe," "Some Soldier Poets," "On Fluctuations of Taste."

John Burroughs joined in the memorial exercises in honor of Theodore Roosevelt by journeying from his home to Garden City, Long Island, to plant a "Roosevelt tree" in the gardens of the Country Life Press. He selected for this purpose a sugar maple and set it near the evergreen tree which John Muir planted several years ago in the memorial grove of these grounds. Octogenarian and more though he is, Mr. Burroughs refused any assistance in filling in the earth about the sugar maple's roots, and himself got down into the hole in order to pack the soil more carefully around the rootlets with his fingers.

Under the title "A Labrador Doctor," Wilfred T. Grenfell has written his autobiography, telling the full story of his years of work among the fisher folk of the coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland. Houghton Mifflin Company has it ready for immediate publication.

A. Emerson Palmer, Secretary of the New York City Board of Education and author of "The New York Public School," is collecting his verses that have appeared in various periodicals for publication under the title "The Riddle of Life and Other Poems." One of his poems, about Dr. Henry van Dyke, which appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES REVIEW OF BOOKS a few years ago, has just been used as part of the dedication to Dr. van Dyke, who is famous as fisherman as well as author, of George Parker Holden's book on fishing, "Streamcraft."

Harold S. Latham's new book for young people, "Marty Lends a Hand," will be ready for publication by the Macmillans this week. Mr. Latham's previous story, "Under Orders," published a year ago, has been very successful, having had several large printings and having been adopted by the school reading circle of one of the Western States.

E. P. Dutton & Co. have found so large a demand for J. W. T. Ley's "The Dickens Circle," which they first brought out in an imported edition, that they have had to print it in this country and now have it ready in an American edition with a special introduction by the author.

Toward the end of this month Doubleday, Page & Co. will bring out Captain Alan Bott's new book, "Eastern Nights and Flights," in which he gives the account of his many thrilling experiences as an aviator with General Allenby's army and later as a prisoner of the Turks. Captain Bott's previous book, "Cavalry of the Clouds," was among the first of the books on the flying experiences of aviators in the great war.

Mrs. Katherine Newlan Burt's novel of the Western prairie country reached a sale of 45,000 copies within five weeks of publication.

Theodore Maynard, whose "Poems" the Stokes Company has just published, has had a short but eventful life. He was born in India and lived there until he was ten years old, was educated in England, came to the United States to study for the ministry, lost his first pastorate because he was suspected of heresy, then worked in a factory, as a bill poster and as a book canvasser and afterward worked his way back to England on a cattle boat. He is proud of having lived several weeks on twenty-five cents a day. He joined the Catholic Church and entered the Dominican novitiate, but returned to secular life and took up literary work. He has published several volumes of poems and essays, of which the volume now being brought out by the Stokes Company is the first to appear in this country. It is his conviction that his loneliness, privations and failures while in this country woke in him the spirit of poetry.

Marjorie Patterson, whose third novel, "A Woman's Man," has just been published by the George H. Doran Company, is a grandniece of that Betsy Patterson of Baltimore who married Jerome Napoleon and became famous throughout two continents because of her beauty and her woes and her long-continued and determined effort to persuade or compel the great Emperor to acknowledge her marriage. Although still in her early twenties, Miss Patterson has won success on the stage and as a novelist.

Clifton Johnson's new guide book of this country, "What to See in America," is ready for publication this week by the Macmillan Company. The book gives a chapter to each State of the Union, with an additional chapter for New York City and another for Washington. Besides telling what is especially worth seeing in each locality, the book devotes attention to the human interests in literature, legend, history, biography, nature, and industry of each State.

E. P. Dutton & Co. announce the fourteenth printing of Leonard Merrick's "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," with an introduction by Sir James M. Barrie, the first volume in their new American edition of Merrick's novels. The three volumes that have followed it have almost equaled the first in popularity, while the fifth, "The Man Who Understood Women and Other Stories," with an introduction by W. J. Locke, bids fair to exceed its predecessors in popularity. Its publication has been delayed by the strikes in the printing trades and orders have been pouring in until its twelfth printing has been demanded, although the book is not yet on the market. The limited edition was all sold out for the entire set of twelve volumes soon after the first one was published.

Kate Douglas Wiggin, whose "Ladies in Waiting" is ready for publication by Houghton Mifflin Company, is now returning to the United States after several months spent in England.

[illegible] published a few weeks ago by Doubleday, Page & Co., returned last week from an all-Summer tour of South America. She started at once across the continent for San Francisco, where she will spend the Winter hard at work.

The Scribners have ready for publication a volume by Ernest Peixotto containing many of the drawings made by him while officially attached, with the rank of Captain, to the A. E. F. for the purpose of helping to make the great series of pictures for the War Department. A narrative of his experiences will accompany the drawings in the Scribner volume.

THE WINGS OF DESIRE

THE WINGS OF DESIRE. By Rita Wellman. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co.

A SUB-TITLE might have cleared the matter up; for apparently Roger Betton, the "hero," had no desires except to avoid everything unpleasant which, in his mind, included most of the things that are. True, the author tells us, though without producing much conviction, that he eventually became a great painter; but he was driven to it by a combination of accident, an inherited talent, and the pressure of his friends. Roger was a beautiful young man who had been dragged around the world and heavily inoculated with culture by a widowed mother, who thereupon brought him back to a suburb of Philadelphia and succeeded in keeping him there till he was 25. Then he went to New York, under protest—he did everything under protest—and his decline and fall began.

The principal agent in the corruption of Roger's Philadelphian purity was a useful and occasionally even praiseworthy instinct to which the author gives the uncomplimentary name of "the Beast." To the unbiased reader it would seem that the Beast was not the instinct, but Roger when under its influence—in amore veritas. So the story which may or may not have intended to be a history of Roger's artistic development, becomes, in effect, a chronicle of his progress from the Oedipus-complex to a resigned Shintoism, via a liaison or two, some contrapuntal jiltings, a society marriage, and the seduction of a beautiful moron of 17. Many women of very different types fell in love with Roger; such things do happen, of course, but it is a little difficult to account for them in this case, for Roger had nothing but his face and a sporadic talent to recommend him. However, none of the characters are very plausible, so their conduct could not reasonably be expected to be more so; an exception, perhaps, should be made for Mildred Knox, the least unreal and least unpleasant of the lot.

No wonder Roger went to Japan; if New York and the human race are as Mrs. Wellman pictures them, they are good things to get away from. But they could have been a good deal better without suiting her hero. Indeed, it would be difficult to construct a universe that would have suited Roger; difficult, and hardly worth the trouble.

MRS MARDEN

ROBERT HICHENS

Author of THE GARDEN OF ALLAH, BELLA DONNA, THE GREEN CARNATION, etc.

¶ Here is a book that is remarkable for its swift directness of narrative and for its realistic mirroring of the world-wide psychic manifestations. Mr. Hichens does not take sides. He merely shows you what happens to the body and spirit of one woman who, though a skeptic, is swept away by the flood tide of spiritualism that is inundating London. In Peter Orwyn Mr. Hichens has done the portrait of a great London medium from life—a man who stands revealed too clearly in his genuine power as well as in his chicanery to be an invention. Here is a book that will be widely read and discussed—a story of one woman's experience that moves to a great climax.

LATEST FICTION

to Germany, which the man known as Jocelyn Thew was to smuggle out of this country in the interest—and for the pay—of von Bernstorff, once German Ambassador to the United States. And very little can be said in favor of his intelligence who fails to divine almost from the very beginning the reason why this same Jocelyn Thew so hates England that in order to gratify this hatred he is entirely willing to do any amount of injury to France and Belgium, not to mention the United States. The dénouement hinges upon the fact that as he has not read an English newspaper in years he is ignorant of facts printed in every reliable American journal—and this although he has spent months in the United States, while all the world was at war.

Mr. Oppenheim seems to have about as poor an opinion of American patriotism as he has of the intelligence of his readers. His heroine, Katharine Beverley, whom he describes as a loyal American girl, never turns a hair when she discovers that she has been tricked into being an accessory to a pro-German plot, and her brother takes the information with about equal calmness, though he, an American serving in the Canadian Flying Corps, does show some relief when he discovers that he is not to be asked "to drop any documents over the German lines" giving aid to the enemy. Neither of them, however, has any objection to being on the very friendliest of terms with the cad and spy—an individual the author seems greatly to admire—who is plotting for Germany and consequently against their country. He had once done them a service, and so Katharine, a New York "society belle" who is also a trained nurse, agrees to cross the ocean with him in charge of a mysterious and dying patient. A secret service man has reason to suspect that Thew is smuggling von Bernstorff's papers out of the country and follows him on board. But, of course, Thew succeeds in tricking him and getting [illegible] pected of complicity and watched by the secret service men. A wearisome amount of uninteresting detail fills up space until, the requisite number of pages having been covered, Jocelyn Thew suddenly learns of his pardon and of the coming convention called to settle, if possible, the Irish question and experiences a complete change of heart.

PINK ROSES

PINK ROSES. By Gilbert Cannan. George H. Doran Company.

THE predominating feeling awakened in the intelligent reader by a perusal of Gilbert Cannan's latest novel, "Pink Roses," is wonder that any human being could by any possibility write so much and say so little. Yet this very fact of its extreme verbosity doubtless will arouse great respect for the book among those naïve souls who feel that because an author uses a great many words to express himself he must therefore and as a matter of course have a very great deal to express. Trevor Mathew, one of those spineless, "l'homme-incompris" type of ego-maniacs Mr. Cannan delights to present as "heroes," emits a veritable smoke screen of words, through which he aimlessly ambles, crying aloud that he alone "understands," he alone grasps the fact that other people do not grasp the real meaning of the universe, he alone knows that nothing is as it should be, or as it seems to be, and that all the rest of the world, lacking as it does the profound insight, the profound comprehension of "truth" which are his, is utterly blind and utterly foolish.

This ineffable youth was the son of a rich man, and could not go to the war because he had a heart murmur. But the two friends with whom he had lived in London went, and one of them was killed and the other became a physical wreck. Whereupon Trevor decided that "nothing had any meaning." As for the war, that didn't really interest him in the least, nor did it really mean anything. London was no longer the pleasant place it had once been, and when an air raid came he was very much frightened. Life without his friends seemed to him "intolerable"; he was not happy, and the happiness or unhappiness of other people was a matter which gave him no concern; moreover, "he didn't like Belgians," while people who "felt violently about the war * * * filled him with disgust." However, he managed to endure his existence, and after a while he met Cora Dinmont, an unintelligent, affectionate courtesan, who wore pink roses, and with whom he had a liaison which lasted for several months. Then he had a sort of nervous collapse, met Ruth Hobday, who also wore pink roses, and immediately fell in love with her. She was just then in the midst of an affair with Sir Seymour Trenham, a married man much older than herself, who belonged to "the generation represented by the Kaiser and Roosevelt * * *—the generation that had never grown up."

WHAT MEN READ

DURING the war there were published, from time to time, reports written by men in the library service of the army giving fragmentary accounts of a phase of the soldiers' life overseas that could hardly be found either in press dispatches or in "personal experience" books. From these accounts, emphasized by occasional "book drives" in this country, one gained the impression that there was a special kind of educational work that was by no means an unimportant feature in preserving army morale; but just how this work was organized and what it accomplished has been only vaguely indicated. The details of it all, as they are now set down in Mr. THEODORE WESLEY KOCH'S "Books in the War," just published by Houghton Mifflin Company, give us a vivid realization of what the subtitle of the volume aptly calls "the romance of library service."

Mr. Koch is librarian of the Lincoln Collection and assistant in the Order Division of the Library of Congress, and through his official position has been in close touch with what was done to supply our soldiers and sailors with reading here and abroad. His book is generously supplied, necessarily, with statistical information regarding the famous army libraries and classes that were maintained during the war by the American Library Association. He tells also of work done along these lines by similar organizations in the British Army. The main feature of his book, however, is less statistical than it is psychological. It is well to know, of course, the number of books circulated, and how they were circulated, in camp and just back of the firing line. But Mr. Koch's analysis of the kind of reading, the particular taste in literature most in evidence among the men, is of more vital interest than mere facts and figures on book circulation. One gathers from his account a definite idea of the kind of book that is most in favor with soldier and sailor, and from this it should not be impossible to gain a clearer notion than we have had of the average man's taste in reading.

A TYPICAL instance of the army educational work is given by Mr. Koch in his account of what was done at Beaune, near Dijon, where, in March of this year, an A. E. F. university was opened. For this a library containing 30,000 volumes was installed, with a seating capacity for 1,500 readers. Although this was in the main established to serve as a sort of college library, the call for reading of every kind gave it a much more comprehensive character than was at first intended. As a general soldiers' library, then, the Beaune collection was well patronized, the kind of books that it had to offer and that was most in favor being thus described:

> Fiction proved to be the class of literature least in demand, and this despite the fact that the copies on the shelves were absolutely new; its percentage of circulation in comparison with class books was about one to six. The explanation for this is to be found in the fact that the library was well stocked with fresh copies of the kind of books that the men particularly wanted—available on open shelves. "The appeal of the shelves and new books is very strong to men who have been roughing it for one or two years," said the librarian. "These new books include practically every subject that men might be interested in—all the businesses, professions, vocations, the sports, history, politics, travel, and literature. Books on France are consistently popular, but drama, poetry, essays (with a surprisingly large call for appreciations of art and literature) are well in the foreground."

IT was this intensely practical attitude toward books that seemed to govern the soldiers' taste in reading. Instance after instance is given of men who used all their spare time reading books bearing directly on some profession or business, to which, presumably, they expected to devote themselves after the war was over. And following these special books there seems to have been a strong demand for works of a more general educational value. Business books first, and then books that would add to the readers' knowledge of history, science, art, in about the order named, was apparently the literary formula for the soldier reader at the front. Facts, practical values furnished the measure of a book. But this severely utilitarian mood changed when the soldier was taken out of active service. This from a British hospital library tells of the craving for fiction and poetry among the wounded Tommies:

> "The handy cheap editions favored by the men have covers that possess limitations in wear and tear," writes W. PETT RIDGE, honorary librarian. "The state of nine-penny novels after a month or two of use is often a compliment to its author and a reproach to the binder. I observed that JACK LONDON'S novels have a short life and a busy one. MEREDITH NICHOLSON'S works, by reason of their popularity, come at frequent intervals to be added to the mound of waste paper. The delightful novels of ALICE HEGAN RICE go from hand to hand, strenuously recommended by the last borrower. I transferred (not without reluctance) my own collection of the books by Mr. Dooley, and their present state may be described as war-worn. The men love 'Audrey' and all the rest from the great pen of MARY JOHNSTON. As to British authors, affection is given to those who write books of adventure, or books that include a reference to sport, or books which are not devoid of the element of humor. 'For the Lord's sake,' beg most of my blue-uniformed customers, 'don't you dare give us one that mentions the war.' Recounting officers demand poetry and cannot get too much of it. They read JOHN MASEFIELD and HENRY NEWBOLT and YEATS. Privately I expect of many of them an experiment in this medium and an attempt to set down in verse the marvelous occurrences and sensations that have come to them out Flanders way."

ON this subject of the popularity of poetry with the army, and also the effort of the soldier to find in his reading something that would take his mind away from the thought of war, Mr. KOCH tells of a little trench anthology of verse that was handed to Mr. JAMES NORMAN HALL, from whose article on the subject he quotes:

> * * * loose leaves from books of various sizes had been sewn together into a little volume which went easily into the pocket of his soldier's tunic. Among others were "Kubla Khan," "Comus," "The Ode on the Intimations of Immortality," all of KEATS'S Odes and "The Eve of St. Agnes," SHELLEY'S "Alastor," HENLEY'S "London Voluntaries," and some selections from the 19th Century Sonnets edited by WILLIAM SHARP. HALL expressed surprise at seeing several poems by FRANCIS THOMPSON, whom he had never thought of as a soldier's poet. On asking his friend why "Parsifal" was included, MASON, by way of answer, took the volume and read the first stanza of "The Poppy."
> * * * "You haven't stood on sentry day after day, watching the poppies grow in No-Man's Land! We have no need of war verse in the trenches. What we do need is something that will take our minds off the horrors of modern warfare after the strain is relaxed."

As an instance of the beneficial effect on the soldier's mind of poetry that is utterly unconnected with war, the experience is quoted of a Sergeant Major who, on the point of a nervous breakdown, suddenly recalled the lines from "Romeo and Juliet":

> Night's candles are burnt out and > jocund Day,
> Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain
> tops.

Those two lines, we are told, by creating an entirely new picture in the officer's mind, saved him. He forgot the horrors of the trenches, and was able to carry out work that before had appeared impossible to him in his nervously overwrought condition.

month. His military career really begins when he was ordered to Arizona in June, 1885, to report to General Crook on the Mexican border near Fort Huachuca.

As an Indian fighter the future General early distinguished himself. In 1886 he served as commanding officer of infantry in a desperately hard pursuit in the Sierra Madres. General Miles, one of the greatest Indian fighters the country has ever known, speaks as follows of General Wood in his published recollections:

> I also found at Fort Huachuca another splendid type of American manhood, Captain Leonard Wood, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. A. He was a young officer, age 24, a native of New Hampshire, a graduate of Harvard, a fair-haired, blue-eyed young man of great intelligence, sterling, manly qualities, and resolute spirit. He was also perhaps as fine a specimen of physical strength and endurance as could easily be found. * * *

At Washington in 1896 General Wood was introduced to Roosevelt, then Assistant Secretary of the Navy. The two men were alike in a great many ways, and yet the biographer notes the differences:

> On the one hand, Roosevelt was a great individualist. He did things himself. He no sooner thought of a thing than he carried it out himself. When he was President he frequently issued orders to subordinates in the departments without consulting the heads of the departments. Wood, on the other hand, is distinctly an organizer and administrator. When he later filled high official positions, he invariably picked men to attend to certain work and left them, with constant consultations, to do the jobs whatever they were.

Without detracting from Roosevelt's greatness, it was General Wood who did the organizing and equipping of the Rough Riders during the Spanish War. After Santiago Wood's promotion to Brigadier General of the United States Volunteers came at once. His administrative ability and knowledge of medicine as military commander of Santiago resulted in the cleaning up of the unbelievable conditions existing in that city. It was in recognition of his work here that President McKinley made General Wood Governor General of Cuba and a Major General of United States Volunteers.

SPANISH-AMERICA AND THE WAR

LESSONS OF THE WAR AND THE PEACE CONFERENCE. By Oreste Ferrara. Authorized translation by Leopold Grahame. New York and London: Harper & Brothers.

MUCH of Spain was sufficiently during the war, many Spanish officers were pro-German, and the Kaiser's gold supported a propaganda with which Washington was as familiar as Madrid. But this prejudice did not taint Latin-American opinion, so far as may be gathered from this work of the Professor of Law at the University of Havana. He is skillful with his pen, as Latin-Americans characteristically are, and writes with much penetration. For example, discussing the Treaty of London, he says that Fiume ought to be included in the lands ceded to Italy, although not in the treaty list. He could not have known when writing, of the incidents of d'Annunzio's occupation. Discussing England's share in the war he says: "England has reached the greatest height of her traditional tenacity in the marvelous effort she has made. With an army of 7,000,000 men, and an expenditure of millions of pounds sterling, her conduct, in spite of the difficulties of her labor problems, and aggravated by the excessive cost of living, has been perfect. Her lofty spirit has been maintained throughout the darkest hours of the Allies' struggles, and each defeat aroused greater determination to win."

When our home opinions are so much divided about the part played in the war by the United States and its President, it is comforting to read the comment of this competent and detached observer: "Throughout this war many have questioned whether his work possessed the quality of the great statesman or the astute politician. He wanted to divide Austria from Germany, and he did it; he wanted to separate the Kaiser from his people, and he did it; he intended to dictate bases for peace, and he did it. If these results, as viewed by a writer not influenced by the passions of the hour, are examined in a just spirit, it will be seen that not only have they been accomplished, but that they have been accomplished with the smallest possible effort." The intent is not to minimize our national effort, but to extol our leadership, and the praise is grateful as our leader lies prostrate while his countrymen obstruct the completion of his task. Actors in this war will appear as giants to our posterity, and already seem such in the opinion of neutral foreigners, who sometimes are said to fill the rôle of a contemporaneous posterity, so to speak.

From his tremendous adventure in Russian Fiction, THE SECRET CITY, Mr. Walpole turns back to the quiet England of his youth. JEREMY is a happy tale of a little boy's life. It possesses a rare double appeal. Not only for the adult does it create the illusion of his own youth, but it unfolds for the child genuinely fascinating experiences with real people and things. The beauty, tenderness and gaiety of childhood is an elusive thing; in the magic by which he makes it live again in JEREMY, Mr. Walpole's many admirers will find a new revelation of his genius. Published at a time when this distinguished young English author is here for his first visit to America since childhood, JEREMY will have an unusual interest for all who prize the finer things.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

THE SECRETS OF ANIMAL LIFE. By J. Arthur Thomson, M. A., LL. D. New York: Henry Holt & Co.

TO all readers who have kept alive the curious spirit, Professor J. Arthur Thomson's latest book, "The Secrets of Animal Life," offers the opportunity of an entertaining exploring expedition into the fascinating world that a knowledge of biology discloses to the observant eye. Added to the pleasure of these arm-chair travels is the instructive advantage of a guide thoroughly qualified to throw fresh light on the multitudinous problems of animal life as they present themselves to the modern biologist. The drama of organic evolution, the marvels of life processes, the puzzles of animal behavior, both instinctive and intelligent, the interweaving of life-histories, the mysteries of adaptations and inter-relations are subjects upon which Dr. Thomson has been writing and lecturing for years, both in his capacity of Regius Professor of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen and as science editor of the Home University Library.

Many chapters of the book are primarily commentaries on the recent writings of other authorities, and have the value of selective quotation. The great bulk of scientific thought presented in the book necessitates slow digestion of its pages by the general reader because of the frequency of polysyllabic biological terms. But Dr. Thomson is a true nature-lover as well as a learned naturalist, an admirable entertainer as well as a resourceful theorist. His presentation of thought-provoking ideas is unhampered in grace by his absorption in his scientific material. And his flare for public expression, coupled with his ability to unbend from the scholar's stiffness in pointing out the wonders of animal life with which we are surrounded on all sides, will add to the interest and reader's understanding enjoyment of the sights he sees on his next country walk.

The majority of the thirty chapters in the book were originally lectures to senior students of natural history in the University of Aberdeen. The first ten studies deal with individual animals; the next six contain reflections on the web of life and appreciations of new problems raised by recent research; the ten that follow raise problems of development and behavior; the remaining fourteen are speculative discourses grouped around the concept of evolution. All of them were originally published in The New Statesman.

One of the chapters that will prove most interesting to the thoughtful reader, to whom the book is primarily addressed, is the one devoted to a consideration of the origin of the wanderlust in man. True nomadism, the author declares, is a heritable character, but a negative one arising from an uninhabited primitive wandering impulse. The tendency to rove may have had either an economic or temperamental basis. Men often unconsciously show the assertion of this ancient trait in their choice of some such occupation as that of tradesmen, itinerant tinker or traveling evangelist. Repression of this tendency may turn the stowaway, who might otherwise have become a great explorer, into a criminal. The war, the author believes, has awakened in many men the latent inclination to roam, and has also made settling down easier for others who were restless in the past.

Another chapter that will be eagerly read is "The Sequel to 'The Jukes.'" "The Jukes," published in 1877, was a study in heredity of a degenerate family. This study has now been carried down to 1915. Of the 1,258 dependants of the original five Juke sisters living in 1915, one-half were found to be feeble-minded, criminals or paupers—ambitionless, antisocial individuals devoid of ideals. Dr. Thomson's consideration of the four possible means of preventing such proliferation of evil include (1) sterilization, (2) custodial care and segregation, (3) improvement by mingling with good stock, and (4) prevention of mismating through the cultivation of pride in race. The last named method he favors as the best. To allow defectives to mingle with good stock he considers dangerously like the scattering of firebrands.

In a chapter on "The Cult of Joy" the author gives a scientific explanation of why the habit of happiness has a good effect upon digestion, circulation, blood pressure, and the nervous system.

Some of the subjects taken up in the book are the possibility of prolonging human life, the question as to whether or not we inherit acquired characteristics, the biology of twins, the storing instinct, the ability of some organisms to remain in a state of suspended vital activity for long periods, the problem of cave blindness, the wonders of instinct, the problem of parasitism, rejuvenescence in animal and man, and many others of equal interest.

In drawing his deductions on these questions Professor Thomson records recent experiments made in an attempt to solve the mystery of the ability of some birds to return over hundreds of miles of trackless sea to the nests from which they have been carried blindfolded. He also tells of the habits and peculiarities of the penguins, of the Amazon ants, the slave-owning militarists of the insect kingdom; of the social life of wasps; of how the rooks frolic at their sham fights; of the playfulness and resourcefulness of the otter; of how the cuckoo dodges the responsibilities of parenthood; of the educability of the snail, and of the parental virtues of the right whale, a gifted creature doomed through man's ruthlessness soon to pass into the keeping of monographs.

GUN FODDER

GUN FODDER. By A. Hamilton Gibbs, Major Royal Artillery. With introduction by Philip Gibbs. Boston: Little, Brown, & Co.

AS we turned the pages of A. Hamilton Gibbs's "Gun Fodder," there rose before our memory the faces of thousands of Tommies, poilus, and doughboys in whose eyes we had seen smoldering dully the inevitable resentment of the rank and file of fighting men who felt that they had been made devil's pawns in the world war—the faces of disillusioned dupes who realized dimly that the ideals for which they and their comrades had been laying down their lives were in reality only masks covering imperialistic ambitions. And we felt that every one of these men would gladly make Mr. Gibbs the spokesman of the bitterness, the tragic rage, the sense of the futility of their sacrifices, the disillusionment and the philosophy of the fatalist that fill their hearts today.

These men would gladly salute A. Hamilton Gibbs. Not as Major Gibbs, M. C.—which was the rank and decoration won by the author during his four years of service—but as Trooper A. H. Gibbs, 9th Lancers, who was the man who went out with "Kitchener's mob" in 1914—just plain Mr. Gibbs, Oxford graduate, who groomed horses in the cavalry.

Throughout Mr. Gibbs's book there is a passionate protest against war. That his plea for tolerance, kindliness, and cooperation in the practice of the peace that has been won at such terrific cost is made without overstrong hope that it will be fulfilled is sadly evident. No man can go through what the author of "Gun Fodder" went through—the soul-crushing experiences of the brutal drageooning of life in the ranks, the tragi-comedy of a debacle like that caused by the blundering in Saloniki, the hell of that awful retreat from the Marne—without becoming somewhat embittered.

Hamilton Gibbs is the younger brother of Cosmo Hamilton, the novelist and playwright, and Philip Gibbs, the famous war correspondent. But he need never lean on this relationship for recognition as a writer; his description of the British retreat from the Marne is as vividly graphic as any bit of personal narrative of the war that we have read.

In an introduction to his "kid brother's" book, Philip Gibbs pays an affectionate tribute to the gallant soldier-author who lived on eternity's brink during four years of fighting in Saloniki and on the western front, who "carried on" with heroism through the charnelsin of murdered cities, with doubt as to the why of his fighting always astride him until a dose of gas ended his military career just as the tide turned in 1918. But to his tributes the elder brother adds:

> I do not think he has yet found the key to the New Philosophy which will arise out of all that experience, emotion, and thought; just as the mass of fighting men are vague about the future which must replace the bad old past.

THE CAREER OF LEONARD WOOD. By Joseph Hamblen Sears. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

IN brief compass this excellent biographical sketch tells the chief facts in the career of Major Gen. Leonard Wood. Born at Winchester, N. In due time the son entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1884. But instead of settling down to the ordinary routine of practice he entered the army as a contract surgeon at the salary of $100 a

WITH AN AMERICAN ARTIST AT THE FRONT

By ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT

I WAS THERE With the Yanks in France. Drawings and paintings by C. Leroy Baldridge. Occasional verse by Hilmar J. Hauknes. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THERE was no American artist who caught so completely the spirit of the A. E. F. as did Leroy Baldridge, the young stalwart from Chicago, whom our headquarters found driving a French camion in the Chemin des Dames area in the Spring of 1918 and summoned into our ranks for work on The Stars and Stripes. None had quite his opportunity. The humor, the stanchness, the accent, form, and hue, the flavor, the very smell of the A. E. F., is in the portfolio of pencil sketches and wash drawings in black and white and color which he brought back with him in June after two full years of varied and eventful service in France.

Some of these drawings were already famous. There were many which, subtly, unobtrusively, persuasively, had worked among the doughboys for a better comprehension of the French. There were others which had been admiringly cut from the soldiers' newspapers, to be pasted up in a thousand and one billets or carried till they disintegrated in a thousand and one wallets. There were others which, hastily drawn by Baldridge at St. Mihiel or in the Argonne, had been carried back home by couriers and spread from one end of America to the other to rally supporters to the Liberty Loans.

Now the best of them have been painstakingly reproduced and gathered into a handsome and durable volume by Putnam's. It is called "I Was There," the wonderfully rich and crowded notebook of one who was there, indeed.

No one can look through its pages without realizing how gifted, discerning, and reticent an artist awoke to the rare opportunity his unthinking enlistment had created. Many will see the wealth of human affection, the love for all patient, suffering mankind, which warms the pictures, bestowing on some a radiance which no palette can give. "Here is one who has vision," they will say, and sit staring long at some of the more eloquent pages.

But to all men and women who, for a long or little time, were citizens of America Overseas, this "I Was There" is something more. For them it is a book of memories that has no equal now and will not be surpassed. For them no collection of official photographs, no volume of mere words, can so swiftly and so clearly conjure up the A. E. F. When they settle [illegible] the house, America, the year 1919, all fade away. The Atlantic vanishes. They are back in the A. E. F., back in the dreary camp of some base port, back in some foul, crazy little village near the Marne, back in the cheerless muck of the Argonne, back on frosty roads winding between the wonder hills of Rhenish Prussia. In more senses than one they are transported, and the power to work this miracle, this annihilation of space and time, is greater in this book of Baldridge's than in any other book the war has left upon the crowded shelves.

See, there's that line waiting dogged in the rain for mum and a hunk of bread, the short, jagged-edged overcoats, still rumpled from some salvage pile, clinging dumply to their legs. You see the black muck underfoot and hear the steady patter of the Autumn rain on their helmets. And there's that corner of a field kitchen, which the cooks have nested under the remains of what was once a red-tiled roof. Two soldiers are morosely peeling spuds, spuds, spuds. You turn a page and are in the Argonne Forest, with the dead earth and the shored dugouts and the black skeletons of trees, with here and there a broken telephone wire dancing in the cold wind.

Then—but turn this page quickly. It is just a spot on a blasted heath, the ugly stump of an old tree, a tangle of barbed wire, a discarded shovel. A dressing station must be near by, for here are two well-worn stretchers, with a tumble of wet blankets, and, from under these, thrust up stiff and big and muddy and grotesque, are the feet of two American boys. Young boys, probably, and thousands of miles from home. Very likely it was just a few years ago you heard them go rattling past your own front gate, swinging their schoolbooks and making game of all the world. Don't lift the blankets to look. Don't, or you won't be able to look further tonight.

See, there's Vaux, just a wreck of the village which the 9th Infantry cleaned out in time to send a dubliant delegation to that Fourth of July parade in Paris last year. And Soicheprey, caught by Baldridge before the Spring rains had washed in its trenches that were once America's own—Soicheprey, a kindly little village of honest, unpretentious, God-fearing folk, their homes now crumbled and white, looking like the bleached bones of some forgotten caravan that had journeyed in this wilderness.

Germany? Yes, there's the uttermost sentry at our bridgehead, standing alert under the arch of an immemorial ruin at Molsberg, the wind snapping out the tail of his overcoat, his feet square-planted on the ancient flagging. Paris? Surely. There's the Sergeant de Ville, standing shoulder to shoulder with a gaunt M. P., a little bit of international co-operation, worked out informally in the swirl of temptation and irresponsibility at the Place de l'Opéra. And Luisette, dear, indefatigable Luisette, who used to dispense the café au lait in the little bistro around the corner from St. Germain l'Auxerrois, where knowing Americans could get butter and sugar and all "les petites choses defendues," because, forsooth, the place, being conveniently near a green-lamped police station, was where the Sergeants de Ville betook themselves for refreshment. And—Zut!—one does not ration a policeman!

The trip home? Yes, grinning doughboys sloppy in blue denim and a glimpse of sun-baked Algeria with a Yank in the bazaars, squatting for syrupy coffee as the guest of some superb Arabian, back and at rest among his own people at last, with the gleam of his Medaille Militaire almost lost in the creamy folds of his robes.

Page after page goes back to the days when Baldridge, with his huge, war-worn Pierce-Arrow truck, delivered shells to the French batteries behind the Chemin des Dames. He seems not to have been greatly interested in the blue devils, the trig and dashing chasseurs, with their dark-blue tams rakishly askew. Rather the battered and wistful Territorials, the uncomplaining old folks, the wide-eyed children—these won him and built up the love and understanding of France that speaks from many a page in his book.

There are the bewildered Moroccans, who used to pose by the hour for him. They would do anything for a package of Camels, not out of any special liking for the brand, but because the picture on the package reminded them of home and set them to jabbering wildly. And see, there is the magnificent ruin of Rheims, standing purified and ghostly in the moonlight—the matchless martyr, whose loving friend, the old, Arliss-like caretaker appointed by the Beaux-Arts, used to [illegible] saw-pow with Baldridge over his Pinard before the tourists came and once more the echo of scuffling feet sounded through the great temple.

Then there is Soissons, with the good folk of the little Hotel St. Christophe well remembered and with an old grandmère, patching a Yankee shirt in the Roman cave underground.

"This is the cellar of her home. The house above no longer exists. For her living she washes clothes for soldiers. Her daughter, with two young children, is a prisoner in Belgium. A third grandchild lives in this cave."

Such notations, in the artist's script, sometimes cling to the original drawing—thumbnail histories of human tragedy.

Not the finest example of Baldridge's work, perhaps, but certainly the most exalted and exalting picture in his book, is that color drawing which serves as the frontispiece for "I Was There." It is without title, and needs none. Even the scribbled note in the corner, pointing out that it was seen in Audenarde, Belgium, Nov. 11, 1918, is not needed. That great day found Baldridge in the front line with the lusty infantry of the wonderful 91st Division, from our Far West.

It is the eleventh hour, and here, standing up serene in the shallow trench, are two big, clear-eyed youngsters from California. They have dropped their guns. Their shoulders are thrown back, as though a load had just fallen from them. Their faraway gaze reaches out beyond the seas. There is about them the look of a task completed. This is a journey's end, and their eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord.

Fittingly this picture opens a book which has a place of its own in American history—has now, and will have a hundred years hence. It remained for a little-known fellow, a youngster at his trade, who enlisted as a private, to create the Comédie Humaine of the A. E. F.

The Young Visiters
By Daisy Ashford
Aged 9 years

No book in recent years has made such a furore in the press of England and America. At a time when white paper is more precious than rubies and the greatest of our daily papers are refusing columns of advertising, scores of newspapers have been devoting space to the story of Daisy Ashford and her astonishing novel. Leading Editorials in papers like the New York "Tribune," the "Times," the "Sun," and what literally amounts to hundreds of columns of enthusiastic comment in the press everywhere attest the wonderful popularity of this book by a child of nine. THE YOUNG VISITERS has captured the hearts of two countries in the twinkling of an eye. For the time being we have a moderate stock of this book. The printing disturbance in New York may make it difficult for us to supply you later on. If you do not wish to be disappointed, it would be wise to place at once with your bookseller an order for as many copies as you are likely to need. There will be no increase in the moderate price of $1.00 for which the book is sold.

wept over by a pair of hovering parents. Else, why so much moisture in the eyes of the girl, as she rapturously assents to the sage observation of her husband—"This is a mighty good little old world—if you treat it right."

Yes, the story has a good moral tone. Even with all its descriptions of fisticuffs, its triteness and its slovenliness of treatment there are many, many readers who will find it interesting and entertaining. Half-grown boys will be sure to like it, and the tired business man may skim it with pleasure. Let us hope that the next book Mr. Seltzer turns out will be one of which far better things can be said. LITTLE MISS MUFFET

LITTLE MISS MUFFET. A Love Story for Grown-Ups. By Elizabeth Kirby. New York: Moffat, Yard & Co.

THIS is the day of the drug store lunch. In the absence of reliable statistics one would not dare to say how many stenographers fortify themselves for daily toil by the consumption of a ham sandwich and a chocolate ice cream soda. But in spite of the popularity of such a diet, one hesitates to approve it—too little solid nourishment to begin with, and too much frothy sweetness in proportion to what meat there is.

Something similar might be said of this "love-story for grown-ups." The author deserves credit at least for trying a new recipe, but the result is disappointing. She begins with a little plot. Miss Muffet, to avoid "busting" in the rectory where fate has placed her, forsakes her home and goes in search of life. After a brief dose of luxury, which palls, she becomes poor and lonely in order to write. Her over-mastering hunger for being loved, which leads her to flutter around literary and near-literary philanderers for a time, finally finds satisfaction in an unexpected but genuine lover. Voilà!

To this slender foundation the author adds an airy meringue of fairy stuff compounded of more or less apt allusions to the classic stories and a sort of Greek chorus of good fairies and bad goblins. All of which are seasons by abundant asides to the reader, deliberately ingenuous in tone, beginning "mind you," and "to tell the truth," and "altogether, you see."

Writing a fairy story is a task that few novelists in their right minds would undertake. It is too difficult. It takes an extreme delicacy of both fancy and artistry. And to step aside from one's story and whisper a word in the reader's ear is a device which demands from the author a nice sense of humor. One remembers how J. C. Snaith, years ago, in "The Principal Girl," externalized himself with a cool whimsicality as rare as it was delightful. But it is hard to do.

Miss Kirby thus had a trying job on her hands, and she has not succeeded any too well with it. With a more rigorous taste and much less striving for effect she would have bettered the book. The rebellious Miss Muffet is genuinely amusing now and then, but the book as a whole transmits humor about as well as a powder-puff conducts electricity. Sentimentality is equally fatal to the fairy-story atmosphere and to a consistently humorous viewpoint. You must either believe in your characters or make fun of them; you can't mix satire and saccharinity.

"Dear Heart," says the real hero when he arrives, "I want to cut open my breast and crush you to my heart like a bundle of sweet flowers."

One is curious about the "grown-ups" for whom the book is written. It can be recommended as a first adventure in literary sophistication to those who have never read anything, but—oh, say Gene Stratton-Porter.

THE SINISTER REVEL

THE SINISTER REVEL. By Lillian Barrett. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

THE first thing that meets the eye when one glances at "The Sinister Revel" is a lurid orange jacket. The next, a still more lurid scarlet cover. Then—the opening sentence:

> Craig Van Dam was eight years old when first the idea of nerves as an integral part of human life entered his calculations.

With which exquisite piece of juvenile psychology there begins a painstaking elaboration, in a new setting, of the time-worn story of the Maine farmer: "I'm goin' t' Portland t' git drunk, and gosh! how I dew dread it."

Craig Van Dam first gets drunk on page 49. ("Craig's nerves were in a desperate state," on page 48,) and from that time on the scandals plod their weary way in close order toward the red binding and orange jacket on the other side of the book.

Craig is jerked up and down, marionette that he is, with monotonous regularity; the other garish puppets weave in and out; and the whole story agitates itself with the conscientious energy—and all the significance—of the artificial surf baths at Palisades Park.

One gathers that the author named her hero Van Dam because that, too, sounded wicked. It is a first novel.

MANY NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS

OLD stories when they are good ones are really the best of all, and all the children will be glad to welcome this year Miss Mulock's "The Little Lame Prince and Other Stories," (Lippincott.) It is good to read again about the dear little Prince Dolor of Nomansland, who sails away from his lonely tower on his magic cloak, the gift of the fairy godmother, and has wonderful adventures. When he is cold a wonderful soft bearskin comes and wraps itself about him, "cuddles up like a nice old mother bear," and being hungry he finds in his pocket some marvelous kind of food more delicious than anything he had ever eaten. The rain comes and gives him water to drink. That is the first story, and following that are the "Adventures of a Brownie," with such a gay little picture for the first one, the brownie and the children in little red coats, the same picture that is on the jacket of the book. Then there is the story of "Poor Prin," a dear little dog which was little Jane's best friend. All through the book are colored pictures by Maria L. Kirk.

Another fairy story is Rupert Hughes's "The Fairy Detectives," (Harpers,) which is called "a real American fairy book," and in which a lively and energetic elf disguises himself in the form of different animals who talk in a most astonishing way. One of the funny things in the story is where a whole regiment of naughty little squirrels charge upon an Italian peanut seller and eat up, free of cost, all the peanuts he purposed to sell to people who fed the squirrels in a less wholesale way. It is not a very thick book. There are seventy-three pages, with attractive drawings by Rhoda Chase, but none of the pictures more attractive than [illegible] Frances Creel, Mr. Hughes's Virginia godchild, to whom he dedicated the story. About the same size, with only a few more pages, is a selection of stories from the children's old favorites—"Tales from Hans Andersen," (Lippincott,) with attractive colored pictures by Maria L. Kirk.

Back again we come to America with the next book, "Indian Legends Retold," by Elaine Goodale Eastman, (Little, Brown & Co.) This is not only a story of American Indians, but b[illegible] a woman with Indian blood in her veins, and there is an introduction by Charles A. Eastman, the father of the writer, a real American Indian, whose Indian name is Ohiyesa. They are short stories, parts of consecutive tales in earlier days, and they come from different tribes. There are very excellent pictures by George Varian.

Maria L. Kirk is again the illustrator of another old-friend book, brought out by the Lippincotts, the "Child's Garden of Verses," by Robert Louis Stevenson.) The old charm is still in the pretty, singing rhymes, there is the dedication of Stevenson's old nurse, Alison Cunningham, and there are the eight new colored illustrations, with the most attractive on the jacket of the book.

"The Adventures of Sammy Sassafras," by Carl Waterman, (Dutton,) is warranted to be a story that will "interest every child from four to forty," and perhaps that is not so far wrong. It is amazing how many interesting animal adventures can be crowded into the life of a small boy. There are many things to learn in the story—why, for instance, should little Sally Sassafras want to wear her brand-new hair ribbon into the woods with Sammy, and why, when she lost it, should the big white rabbit want to steal it, and then—who would think that big old Mr. Bear would be kind enough to get it back for her?

When three friends who are of the age to be preparing for Yale and spend a Summer by themselves on the Maine coast there is sure to be some fun, and there is in "Watty and Co.," by Edward Hall Putnam, illustrated by Cookie, (Macmillan.) The firm of Watty and Co. is made up of Watty—naturally—Lanky and Cookie. One would guess by the name of the illustrator that he was one of the firm, and his illustrations are, so to speak, home made. Watty has written a beautiful poem for each picture. The poems and the pictures are so expressive that really the text is hardly needed, but probably no boy will complain that the story has been thrown in.

Such a nice tale is "The Little Acrobat, A Story of Italy," by Jane Prichard Duggan, (Little, Brown & Co.,) and the very nice pictures by Nina French Rickford are charming and illustrative. Natale was the little acrobat, very happy in the little circus to which he belonged and in his funny little trick with the horse. Then comes a nice lady [illegible] who thinks Natale should go to school. Perhaps he should, but that is the really hard time of Natale's life. The story tells all about it, how Natale went back to the circus again and, incidentally, how he saved Giovanni's hard-earned money. There is plenty of Italian atmosphere.

A first-class girl's story with plenty of incident is "Nan Sherwood at Rose Ranch; or, the Old Mexican's Treasure," by Annie Roe Carr, (George Sully & Co.) It is a nice, thick book, beginning with girls at school where a girl from a Western ranch is found to be a little different in many ways from the others. One of the things which surprises the school girls is that she is behind them in athletics; doesn't know anything about basket ball, &c. There are many things in outdoor life that Rhoda Hammond does know, as Nan and Bess learn, when they go to Rose Ranch. That is where the thrills in the story come and the treasure that has been stolen. There is a beautiful black "outlaw," which adds some of the mystery in the book.

"The Boy Vigilantes of Belgium," by George Ethelbert Walsh, (The Century Co.), is an organization formed in Belgium by an American boy who was visiting a cousin there when the war broke out. The boys, because they are boys and less under suspicion than the grown-ups, are able to accomplish much good. There is plenty of danger for them, the story is chuck full of thrilling adventures and there are decorations from the King at the end.

THE DISTURBING CHARM

THE DISTURBING CHARM. By Berta Ruck. Illustrated. Dodd, Mead & Co.

AMONG all the numerous producers of whipped cream and spun sugar fiction there are few who possess a touch so [illegible] of Berta Ruck. Fairy tales in which each pretty Princess finds a gallant Prince all her own, where youth is the greatest thing in the world, and "so they were married and lived happily ever after" the conclusion of the story, they are told with a lightness and gay humor which saves them from the saccharine inanity usually found in such productions. Moreover, there are moments when this story, spun sugar fiction though it is, shows traces of some stronger, finer substance. The account of the young aviator rehearsing in sleep the awful moment when he crashed, and awakening from nightmare to pour into Mrs. Cartwright's sympathetic ears the tale of the five Australians who tried to rescue him as he lay pinned beneath the wing of his airplane, coming six times with stretchers across No Man's Land, is worthy of a novel of a higher type than this one. So, too, is the picture of the arrival of the American soldiers, "tall, fit, and splendid * * * faultless in kit and accoutrements," and their salute to the little war-worn troop of British fresh from the trenches; "the new allies, equipped for victory, saluted the old, all but broken, but carrying on." Only a little inferior to these is Jack Awdas's description of his unauthorized flight, when, during the air raid on London, he went up in his scout monoplane and wrought vengeance on the Hun.

For this is a wartime, though not a war, story. It opens in a French hotel near the Bay of Biscay, where all, or nearly all, the principal characters in the book are assembled. Olwen Howel-Jones, a pretty, nineteen-year-old Welsh girl, is there with her uncle, a famous scientist whose secretary she is, and it is to this uncle that the "Disturbing Charm" is sent, the little packet of musky, scented powder which contains "the love germ" for which men have been seeking throughout the ages. Olwen, of course, finds the packet, and proceeds to make use of it—how and with what results the story tells. She has her own romance and almost all of the other characters have theirs from cheerful little Mr. Brown, once a clerk who sold lace over a counter, now a Lieutenant in the army, to splendid young Jack Awdas, the airman, and Captain Ross, the Scotch officer who had lost an arm, and declared himself to be "the finest judge of women in Europe." The "hotel spinster," at whom no man had ever looked, received a share of Olwen's precious charm, but the beautiful, white and gold American girl, Golden van Huysen, as sweet and sound and strong of mind and heart as of physique, did not really need it, though it came to her by accident when Mrs. Cartwright, who, being 40 years old, could only live and love "vicariously" (!) lost her share of the wonderful packet. These are by no means the only characters in the novel, but the author has managed her several romances with considerable skill, keeping a firm hold on the more or less tangled threads of each. A very pleasant little tale is this of "The Disturbing Charm."

Take a Reading Course

Everybody reads, but too many read without any plan, and to no purpose. The college graduate is like other people in the need of system, but a little more likely to realize his need. The Chautauqua Reading Course is useful alike to the person of limited training, who labors many nights over each book, and the critic or vigorous man of affairs who can sweep thru them all in a few hours. For either, a group of related, intelligible, and competent studies leads to a well rounded result.

Don't Read at Random

For many years, the very mention of a reading course has meant without further explanation the Chautauqua Reading Course. It was the first and is still the best and it alone has a world-wide fame. Leave it to Doris

When you say that Ethel Hueston's new story is better than her PRUDENCE OF THE PARSONAGE you have said something. But, as proof of the pudding is the eating, so is the reading of DORIS the confirmation of this assertion. It is wholesome and charming and is made delightfully human by Mrs. Hueston's luxuriant humor.

The author has a zest for life and a perception of the humorous, and nowhere have they been so irresistible as in LEAVE IT TO DORIS. Illustrations by W. B. King. Price $1.50 net.

The Blue Moon

All sorts and kinds of hunters have had their prowess recorded in fiction, but Mr. Anderson has found in the pearl hunters a new type, a fresh inspiration. The heroine of THE STARLING is too lovely not to be found out behind the hedge which her father has drawn around her; the two men in the story do it. A HANDFUL OF RECENT BOOKS OF VERSE

POEMS ABOUT GOD. By Lieutenant John Crowe Ransom. New York: Henry Holt & Co.
THE WAY OF WONDER. By May Doney. New York: George H. Doran Company.
THE MAN OF KERIOTH. By Robert Norwood. New York: George H. Doran Company.
POEMS OF LONDON. By John Presland. New York: The Macmillan Company.
POEMS: FIRST SERIES. By J. C. Squire. New York: Alfred A. Knopf.

OUR dear old-fashioned ancestors found it edifying to believe in a God who had made them in His image and to worship Him and ask His forgiveness. Some of the moderns, however, being unwilling to dispense with God altogether, attempt to change all that. They would create God anew in their own image. Therefore it is the fashion among them to chide Him with derisive audacity, or, with grandiose generosity, to forgive Him! Yet the old philosophy was not without its occasional blasphemies and the new is not altogether and always devoid of reverence.

Lieutenant Ransom's "Poems About God" seem to be written in the spirit of the new philosophy, although they are more remarkable for an iconoclastic irony directed against old beliefs than for any definition of new faith. In none of them do we find any such new idea of God as that which H. G. Wells tried to explain in "God, the Invisible King." Lieutenant Ransom's God is friendly, meddlesome, intrepid, tyrannical, as the mood takes the poet; and He is anthropomorphic, created in the image of a very young man. Perhaps Lieutenant Ransom has discovered this, for, in his introduction, written two years after the poems, he says:

"In this reviewing act I find myself thinking sometimes that the case about God may not be quite so desperate as the young poet chooses to believe."

The young poet certainly chose to believe that it was desperate! He says:

I will not worship wickedness
Though it be God's—I am ashamed!
For all his mercies God be thanked
But for His tyrannies be blamed!

So much for God's ways with men. And as for God's ways with nature—well, the poet prefers a landscape gardener. In "Geometry" he says:

My window looks upon a wood
That stands as tangled as it stood
When God was centuries too young
To care how right he worked or wrong.

He still plants on as trustily
As in his driveling infancy.

Gardeners only cut their trees
For nobler regularities.
But from my window I have seen
The noblest patch of quivering green
Lashed till it never quivered again.
God had a fit of temper then,
And spat shrill wind and lightning out

He speaks more kindly of God, but with nonchalant familiarity, in "Noonday Grace," a poem that recalls Robert Herrick's lovable lyric, "A Thanksgiving to God," in which the greater lyrist said:

Lord, I confess, too, when I dine,
The pulse is thine,
And all those other bits that be
There placed by thee;

Thou mak'st my teeming hen to lay
Her egg each day.

As a parallel here are Lieutenant Ransom's lines:

Thank God who made the garden grow,
Who took upon Himself to know
That we loved vegetables so.

Cornfield beans and cucumbers
And yellow yams for sweeteners.

This poem would be one of the best in the book if it were not for the tiresomeness of the rhyming. In one part of it eleven successive lines have the same rhyme, which is more than modern ears can endure.

Yet with all that might be said against his rhyming and against his theology, Lieutenant Ransom is promising as a poet. He phrases things freshly and his daring humanity is an assurance that he would be able to write well about man—the proper study of mankind.

In "The Way of Wonder" May Doney has much to say about God. But her God is not the astonishing God of Lieutenant Ransom and the moderns. He is the Ancient of Days of Christian Mysticism, and the keynote of Miss Doney's book is sounded in the text with which it begins:

When you go with God all the way is wonder.

This is the thread upon which all her thoughts and emotions are strung. She praises valleys because they face heaven, and hills because they are uplifted toward it, and flowers as evidences of God's love.

God has a million mouths wherewith
He kisses the world.
Every cup of a rose, and every lily
cancerled,
Every wonder that soars, and every beauty that dips,
Is one of the angel crowd of His passion's countless lips.

Her chief interest in men and women seems to be due to her belief that they are God's children; and this belief bears fruit for her in a devotion to manhood at its best.

Men are God's little children, bond and free,
Who from the mothers whence their life began
To mothers clasped yet closer ever ran,
Masters and babes of their own brides to be.

Perhaps her ideals are most concisely stated when she says:

The only union that may be
A vessel of Eternity
Holds God within it growing sweet
As bread and wine all souls to meet.

This book comes to us introduced by Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch, who says:

Miss Doney writes poetry. When one comes to qualify that poetry, to name its note, the first word for it is "mystical"; as to me it seems impossible to overlook her kinship of spirit with the seventeenth century mystics, Crashaw, Vaughan, Treherne.

Side by side with the rebellious modernity of Lieutenant Ransom and the devout mediaevalism of Miss Doney it is well to set the illuminating spirituality of Robert Norwood, whose poetic drama, "The Man of Kerioth," is a finer book than either of the others mentioned. It is better poetry, more profoundly thought and felt, and written in a simpler, stronger, more natural style.

Without a line that could be called trite or tiresome or artificial, Mr. Norwood tells the story of Jesus, the Carpenter, the friend of all mankind. He shows Jesus sitting down by the roadside and whittling a piece of wood into a boat for the little son of Simon surnamed Peter, or molding a bird out of clay for the pleasure of a little girl. He interprets the miracle at Cana of Galilee without recourse to a material changing of water into wine by showing how the presence of a supremely beautiful personality at the feast sufficed to quench the thirst of the revelers. He shows how blind Bartimaeus came to have a sweeter vision than men who could see. And instead of the supernaturalism of the miracles as they used to be explained to us, Mr. Norwood reveals the greater miracle of spiritual power over life.

His treatment of the Bible characters is fresh and unconventional. Judas, the lover of Mary of Magdala, is not the arch fiend. He is only a worldly man who expects the Kingdom of Heaven to come with all the pomp and circumstance of the kingdoms of this world, and who is unable to find Messias in Christ without that pomp and circumstance. What his heart tells him he cannot will not accept, and he goes his way, forever looking for a sign, forever trying to test and prove Christ, forever saying, "Now, Master, show Your power!" until the end, when, broken hearted, he hangs himself because, misled by the quality of his frantic faith, he has betrayed his friend.

Two lines serve as an admirable characterization of Simon Peter:

Simon, a great wild fellow with a voice
Booming like billows on wave-beaten rocks.

The other personalities, also, are as fresh and convincing as if the centuries of legend had never made the great story familiar. This is a fine achievement.

Friendliness not unlike the friendliness of The Carpenter in "The Man of Kerioth" is the distinguishing characteristic of "Poems About London" by John Presland, a book about people. There are no great lights in this book and no very deep shadows, but a good glow of kindly sympathy. It has none of the many colored romanticism with which Thomas Burke has invested London and her citizens. It is not a great book, not even a brilliant book, and not at all a clever book. But it is very likable. One could sit with this poet in the twilight not saying much, but getting a certain quiet enjoyment out of the silence, or out of

The wonder at ways that our spirit
May take for itself to rise,
How a puddle may be a silver lake,
And a chimney touch the skies.

Among the best poems in this book are "A Ballad for Herman," a song of the humble things that are everlasting or forever repeated; "The Saint's Birthday," "In the Tube," and "Street Music," a picture of an old fiddler,

Dragging his knobby, lame old feet
In the gutter of this quiet street.

There is no grudging in his eyes,
Nor anger, nor the least surprise
At the uneven scales of fate;
Glad of the sun, against the rain
Hunching his shoulders, age and pain
He takes as his appointed state.

A Few Words About
Archibald Marshall

¶ The question "what makes a book sell?" is not always given the same answer, but it is generally accepted that the most effective force is "word-of-mouth advertising." Certain it is that the wide and ever-increasing popularity of Archibald Marshall may be traced to that form of publicity.

¶ Archibald Marshall is a realist of innate skill who writes in a leisurely and highly entertaining fashion of contemporary English life. His characters live and, as one critic has said, to know them is "to meet and to associate on terms of happy intimacy with delightful, well-bred, clear-minded men and women."

¶ Mr. Marshall's earlier books are read as widely as his later ones. This in itself is proof of the permanent value of his work.

¶ SIR HARRY, a new long novel from his pen, will be ready in November.

THE SQUIRE'S DAUGHTER	ABINGTON ABBEY
THE ELDEST SON	THE GRAFTONS
THE HONOUR OF THE CLINTONS	THE GREATEST OF THESE

She knew of Trevor's relations with Cora, but she felt that women were exclusively responsible for everything, and that no man should ever be blamed, no matter what he did—upon reaching which conclusion she was "astonished at the power and force of her own thought." So she broke more or less definitely with the unlucky Sir Seymour, who had never "had the smallest doubt that he possessed her." Meanwhile, the Russian revolution, combined with his entertaining fashion of contemporary English life. His characters live and, as one critic has said, to know them is "to meet and to associate on terms of happy intimacy with delightful, well-bred, clear-minded men and women."

When she first appears there are moments during which we feel that had she been drawn by another hand Ruth might have been a rather likable person, but Trevor, from the beginning to the end, is an egotistical, flabby-minded bore. However, as he meditates a great deal about the passing of the old life and the iniquities of the elder generation, which cannot understand—he is very strong on "understanding"—and how the newspapers are all afflicted with a sort of senile dementia and no one really thinks or divines actual "truth" except himself and possibly Ruth and Ruth's seventeen-year-old brother—these being, at least, the conclusions which we seem dimly to discern through the mists of verbiage—he probably will be thought a most profound philosopher by various "Little Groups of Serious Thinkers," as well as by those ingenuous and sheeplike persons whose mental attitude was once summed up by the immortal W. S. Gilbert:

If this young man expresses himself
In terms too deep for me,
Why, what a very singularly deep young man
This deep young man must be!

THE RANCHMAN

THE RANCHMAN. By Charles Alden Seltzer. Chicago: McClurg & Co.

THIS is a fair example of the sort of book that constantly and inevitably suggests the underlying motive of the author to make scenic effects which will strike home in "the movies." Loose in construction and feeble in characterization, it is forceful in the way anything full of sledge-hammering is forceful. If reiterated adjurations can convince, the reader must have it borne in upon him that the hero—an unreservedly conventional hero of the old-fashioned "blood and thunder type"—is rashly brave, quick-witted enough to checkmate a train holdup, and as ready with his fists as with his very singularly cold-blooded, not to say sordid, lovemaking. There is not one character in the book who is imbued with a distinctive individuality; not one that is not a mere lay figure apparently drawn by the author from the great void for the purpose of singing the hackneyed tune of a wild Western slang which has so little existence in fact that a traveler might walk along the streets of any modern Far West town for hours at a time without recognizing the vernacular of which this book is full.

But a novelist is not necessarily a photographer of actuality, and if Mr. Seltzer had taken the pains to sketch with delicacy or with grace his commonplace personages we could have pardoned him his lack of originality. But this book must have been—it certainly must have been—dashed off with an eye upon the clock and a deliberate ignoring of all artistic responsibilities. Such phrases as "wreathed into a smile," "grinned shallowly," "morbid curiosity," "soul cringing in terror," and so on, disfigure almost every page. From the point of view of good writing, we search in vain for anything to praise. But the book is distinctly worthy in tone. It performs the duty which many beautifully wrought works consciously disdain and cynically neglect; it punishes vice and rewards virtue, with an almost touching faithfulness. In the rough and tumble combats of Dawes, the little town loved and defended by Taylor, the burly villains meet sure and quick punishment at the hands of the able hero; the "girl"—a heroine so nebulous that she remains in the memory simply "the girl" of the book—comes out finally, the happy wife and mother—no, that is not told in the story; but it is so entirely in keeping with that "fade-away" in the movies that it seems as if one did see something in the distance, a big-eyed baby, being wondered over, smiled at and will enjoy his illustrious son's first book

A genuine American version of America's recent part in world affairs, many new anecdotes of the late ex-President—many personal stories of his four boys at war told by his eldest son, Lt. Col. Roosevelt, and his son in-law, Dr. Derby.

Average Americans
THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Young Colonel Roosevelt saw "the big show" from first to last. He was with the first division that went abroad, in the first battle after America's entry, was wounded, promoted and with the first troops to cross the bridgehead. Every inch a Roosevelt, with usual Roosevelt vigor, he tells the story of his own part and the reactions of the war upon his father, as shown in letters to his four sons in the service. There are delightful glimpses of the ex-President's companionship with his boys and vivid pictures of the lamentable cost to America of a vacillating military policy. This is strong, straight-to-the-point talk by a young American bent on perpetuating the ideals of an illustrious father.

"Wade in, Sanitary!"
by RICHARD DERBY
Lt. Col. M. C., U. S. A., Division Surgeon, Second Division

The fine work at the Front of Dr. Richard Derby, Theodore Roosevelt's son-in-law, won the admiration of the world. His story of the surgeons in khaki is dramatically interesting. His is the first picture of the struggle from the medical slant and a big addition to American literature of the war..... In Press

DANGEROUS DAYS

In its Second Hundred Thousand. Unmistakably the distinguished novel of American life. A romance of fine proportions, clear in its vision, absorbing in itssheer story-interest, and wholesome in its outlook on the lives of men and women of today. DANGEROUS DAYS deals with that crisis in married life when the inequality of spirit and mind in husband and wife puts to the test the fibre of human devotion.

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

has earned her position in the field of the American novel by years of faithful and sound work. Her wide appeal is due to the fact that she has always seen "that something else," that "finer thing" beneath the superficial appearance. The portrayal of mere surfaces does not interest her. The truth, the beauty, the love, the sacrifice behind the mask—these she is infinitely moved by and in turn she moves others by showing them the vision. It is through these qualities that her books make their appeal to a yearly increasing audience.

NEW YORK AND CANADA AS SEEN BY NOVELISTS

New York Times Review of Books:

MR. ALEXANDER ANDERSON, in his letter in your Oct. 12 issue protesting that most so-called "New York" novels present a picture of life in the metropolis that is entirely non-typical of either New York or America, revives a well-known axiom that might afford him some explanation, even if no consolation. That is, the average publisher gives the public what it wants—even though what he gives it is only what he thinks it wants. The average romantic author, too, seems singularly lazy; he merely takes a certain style of hero, heroine, or setting that has proved popular, so popular indeed that it has almost crystallized into a type, and revamps it in new colors or under a new name. This is analogous to the theory of the vaudeville performer that all Irishmen are necessarily funny, all English lacking in power to use aspirates, all Frenchmen heavily bearded, and so forth—just as we were brought up on the myth that all collie dogs are treacherous. The movie has still further hammered humanity into ready-made types and combinations, just as it has classified physical beauty into two or three types; so that we never see, for instance, the fisherman's daughter falling in love with the strange young man who is wrecked on that neck of the woods without knowing that eventually we will see her develop into a popular singer in evening dress, the vogue of the big city to which she has gone, in rags, to find the young man after he was borne away on his mother's yacht. When we see the discontented society woman—on the screen—seeking to "live her own life her own way," we know perfectly well that in the end she and her studious husband will be reunited over [illegible] when the baby is favorish. And so on.

Perhaps the public, too, is lazy, and lacks energy as well as imagination to demand new combinations. One could imagine, say, the gasp of horror should the villain of melodrama appear minus his fur coat, silk hat, waxed mustache, and cigarette. I remember reading in a magazine a year or two back a highly diverting article "What America Must Be Like," written by an Englishman who had never been in the United States, followed by "What England Must Be Like," written by an American who had never been in England, each article being based entirely upon the fiction, drama, newspapers, and moving pictures of the other nation. One can quite see how many erroneous impressions of either country could be created by the study of much contemporaneous literature, which, pretending to be an "American novel" or an "English novel," merely pictured one section or phase of its subject—and that generally a minor phase, such as the underworld of New York.

The present writer can sympathize with Mr. Anderson because he happens to live in a part of this continent that has long been the prey of the romantic but carelessly inaccurate fictionist. One never reads a story of Canadian life, nor sees a moving picture alleged to have been laid in Canada, without reading or seeing so much that is untypical as almost to be wilfully misrepresentative. By somewhat of a coincidence, your Oct. 12 issue contains on another page a review of a so-called "Canadian" story carrying as a sub-title, "A Story of God's Country." In a current movie by the same author, the same "God's Country" is shown, apparently, as the country round Great Slave Lake, in the Far North, and practically uninhabited—as typical of Canada as would, say, a movie laid in the Everglades of Florida be of the United States. But let that pass. The recipe for writing a story, play, or movie about Canada is to take some cowboys, a French-Canadian fur trapper, a saintly old Roman Catholic priest, a half-breed whisky runner, a woman in a gambling saloon, a violent desperado who is a perfect dear to his horse, and, of course, a Mounted Policeman, and to mix these ingredients together against a background of firs, snow, dog sleds, and violent action. Especially snow, in deference to the popular superstition among the fictionists that Canada's climate is very different from that of New York State or Minnesota.

Such a conglomeration, which represents practically any story about Canada, really illustrates so tiny a phase of this great country as to be absolutely misleading, if not libellous. To begin with, it is hopelessly inaccurate in many important facts; such, for instance, as the plentiful strewing over the atmosphere of French Canadians, in the "wild and woolly West," where all this hodge-podge takes place, (incidentally, when will the American writer ever discover that Canada, like the United States, has an East as well as a West?) the French-Canadian population is very small. It is hopelessly wrong in chronology, because there are practically no cowboys left in Western Canada, which is, as a matter of fact, cut into more small wheat farms, with greater mileage of fence, than the neighboring States of North Dakota, Montana, and Washington. Twenty-five years ago the cowboy flourished, but he is now, except in one or two small sections, almost as rare as the buffalo. It may amuse the reader to learn that at one "cowboy stampede" put on at a Western Canadian town recently for the visit of the Prince of Wales nearly all the cowboys came from the United States.

Thirdly, such a picture of Canada is seriously wrong in intent, because it is all so manifestly written to please an imaginary public demand for a "God's country" of outlaws and snow. The Royal Northwest Mounted Police, for example, are never shown in fiction, drama or movies save as demigods doing extraordinarily impossible things. I do not depricate that splendid force, among whom I have many friends, by saying that its life and conduct are entirely different from the conventional fictional picture. Its field of jurisdiction, to take one case, is entirely in rural districts and in towns too small to support a police force. This means that most of its work is routine work of a particularly non-inspiring character. The way that Mounted Police have—in fiction—of popping up at altogether unexpected and exciting moments is entirely at variance with the fact that a "mountie," would no more leave his "beat", without instructions from his superior than would a traffic cop in New York quit his corner in the rush hour to engage in secret service sleuthing—to say nothing of the other fact that were the frequency of Mounted Police in fiction to be taken as indicative of the size of the force the latter would aggregate about 70,000 instead of the 700 it actually has. I have it on the excellent authority of the man who has written the authorized history of the Northwest Mounted Police that the gobs of mawkish sentimentality which have been spilled by story writers about the force would have had a very serious effect upon the morale of the men, who might be tempted to try to live up to the super-heroic representation of themselves but for their own saving sense of humor, which makes all such perpetrations a source of barracks hilarity.

I can perhaps be allowed to cite a final instance of the mistakes made by careless authors of Canadian fiction. A magazine writer wanted a place-name to supply local color in a Wild West story. Never having been in the West, like so many writers of cowboy stories, he did the first thing that occurred to him and took a name off a map. His story therefore began something to the effect that a couple of cowboys were lounging in the shade of a water-tank at Calgary, reading a week-old paper that some kind passenger had thrown off a train in commiseration of their isolation, loneliness, and lack of reading matter. Calgary meant nothing in that young writer's life, but it happened to live there at the time his story appeared in a well-known 20-cent magazine, and it caused quite a furore. The people of Calgary, on their way home from skyscraper offices, read it in the street cars and were so spellbound that they forgot altogether to read the two evening and one morning newspapers, with Associated Press wires, Mutt and Jeff cartoons and other metropolitan delights, published right there in the city of Calgary.

JOYCE KILMER'S WORKS

New York Times Review of Books.

AMONG the best sellers I note one is listed as "Joyce Kilmer's Poems, Essays and Letters." Will you allow me to say, through the medium of your paper, in which my son, Sergeant Joyce Kilmer, did such good work, that such an announcement is very misleading. My son's literary reputation is very dear to me, his mother—and as he published six books before his glorious death in France, I do not think it fair that the two small volumes containing a more or less accurate memoir—a mass of letters—or a few poems and essays should be called "a collection of Joyce Kilmer's works." Many people are buying the set with that wrong impression, and I think it only fair to state that my son published three books of poetry, namely: "Summer of Love," "Trees and Other Poems," and "Main Street and Other Poems"; "The Circus and Other Essays," "Literature in the Making," (a collection of interviews first appearing in THE NEW YORK TIMES,) and his last book, published while he was in France, called "Dreams and Images"—an anthology of Catholic verse. He gave his life willingly for his country. Is it fair that his books, written during his short, brilliant life, should be ignored and forgotten by such misleading announcements?

The Box With Broken Seals

By
E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

IN this new novel Mr. Oppenheim returns to the field of his greatest success and unfolds in his best style a thrilling narrative of a German spy, Jocelyn Thew, and the English Secret Service.

"This story was written," says Mr. Oppenheim, "to explain exactly how the important documents which were not found in the chest with broken seals belonging to Ambassador von Bernstorff when he sailed from America were conveyed to Europe."

The reader follows with avidity the daring moves of Thew from the time he sails from New York on the "City of Boston," accompanied by a dying man and a special nurse in the person of Katherine Beverly, a society girl who is under obligations to Thew, to the climax, which will surprise even the inveterate Oppenheim reader.

Dr. Grenfell is known throughout America not only for his work in Labrador, but also for his stories of life in the far north. His autobiography is a story of adventure and heroic achievement that can hardly be equalled in modern times, told with a vividness, human interest and joy of life that will bring the reader back again and again to its pages.

RECENT BOOKS OF VERSE

London and elsewhere. In "Poems: First Series" we find bits of pure fantasy, intriguing, and strange interpretations that are haunting and incomplete like "The March," rather disagreeably intellectualized studies like "On a Friend Recently Dead," and powerfully visualized scenes like those in the "Ode: In a Restaurant." Mr. Squires is no companion for the twilight unless one wishes to find in poetry the delectable feeling of creepiness that comes to all of us when we are taken quite away from the world as we know it, or when that world is interpreted in ways with which we are not familiar.

The poem which is likely to have the widest appeal is the first in the group, called "Friendship's Garland"—a title trite in days gone by. This poem is reminiscent of the mad pranks of boyhood and is very well done. But there is finer lyrical magic in these lines from "A Chant":

Faded is the memory of old things done;
Peace floats on the ruins of ancient festival;
They lie and forget in the warmth of the sun,
And a sky silver-blue arches over all.

O softly, O tenderly, the heart now stirs
With desires faint and formless; and seeking not, I find Quiet thoughts that flash like azure kingfishers
Across the luminous, tranquil mirror of the mind.

"Thornton W. Burgess' Masterpiece"
THE BURGESS BIRD BOOK FOR CHILDREN

A Review by America's Leading Naturalist
Dr. WILLIAM T. HORNADAY
Director, New York Zoological Society

"For a number of years parents have been asking me, 'What is the best book about birds for little children?' And that question has caused me much trouble. Now, 'The Burgess Bird Book for Children' is the answer.

"The new bird book is its author's masterpiece. Of course it is written in the personal-narrative style of 'The Bedtime Stories,' and it represents the author at his best. As a children's book of birds, it is a stately volume, and it will last 'Anxious Mother' through many a long day. Fifty-eight species of birds are so thoroughly treated that each of them receives the honor of a colored picture by Louis Agassiz Fuertes, but scores of other species appear independently.

"If there is anything in Mr. Burgess' text that merits criticism, we have failed to find it. The book is a distinct triumph, in text and in pictures. It rings true, and it is by far the best bird book for children that we ever have seen. In fact, it is the very book that 'Anxious Mother,' the children and the booksellers have all been awaiting, for twenty years or more."

With full color illustrations of 58 birds, by Louis Agassiz Fuertes

BASIL KING ON THE ABOLISHING OF DEATH

THE ABOLISHING OF DEATH. By Basil King. New York: Cosmopolitan Book Corporation.

FOR the first time in a long and successful literary career, Basil King has turned aside from fiction, of which he has a dozen or more volumes to his credit, and in this new book enters the field of report, exposition, narrative, and argument. It is chiefly concerned, with an experience of his own in the attempt to bridge the dark river of death and bring back some account of its black-veiled further shore. His exposition of the life beyond that veil is the result of what he believes to be communication through the medium of writing with a man whom he calls "Henry Talbot." He assures the readers, however, that this discarnate personality was during his life on earth a famous chemist renowned throughout America and Europe for his attainments in that science, but he does not, he says, "feel authorised to avail" himself of the use of his right name.

Mr. King's interest in spiritual investigation is recent, for he explains that this book had its origin in the request from a popular magazine for four articles on religion, and that he had written part of them when this new knowledge began to come to him. It so much changed his feelings and convictions that he recalled the finished articles and wrote instead the four that comprise this book. The communication between himself and Henry Talbot is carried on by the automatic writing of a young woman whom he calls, for the purposes of this account, "Jennifer." She is, he says, an average, normal, spirited American girl in her early twenties, with the usual tastes of girlhood, who previously knew nothing of psychic phenomena and literature, and had barely heard of automatic writing. The author was speaking to her about it when she suddenly said, "I believe I could do that," took pencil and paper, and at once Henry Talbot wrote his name and earthly occupation. Mr. King examines the possibility of the communications being the product of subconscious action in her own mind and dismisses it as being most improbable. Instead he has come to the conclusion that her service is comparable to that of the telephone wire in a telephonic conversation. Of the reality of Henry Talbot's personality, the genuineness of the communications from him and the truth of the account he gives of life beyond the grave Mr. King has no doubt whatever. His narrative is very simple, earnest, and utterly convincing, and, of course, correspondingly impressive. The book will undoubtedly increase and deepen the already widespread interest in spiritistic phenomena and will also give much consolation to the bereaved as well as hope and comfort to those for whom the thought of life's ending has heretofore brought dismay and horror.

The first chapter, from which the volume takes its title, discusses the general subject of the increased interest during recent years in spirit communications, studies some of the best known of them, such as Sir Oliver Lodge's book, "Raymond," and Margaret Cameron's "The Seven Purposes," describes the turning of his own attention to the communications of Henry Talbot, recounts some of their conversations with especial reference to the passing over of the spirit into the beyond and to the nature of the life into which it enters. To Henry Talbot himself he makes, in the foreword, this interesting and extraordinary tribute:

> Of all human characters with whom I have ever had dealings Henry Talbot begins to assume for me the largest and most lovable proportions of the soul * * * In the first place, there was never any one more approachable. His welcome is like that of a generous, wide-open door. "I am all love," he kept saying in the first days of the intercourse, and that conviction has been carried over from his atmosphere into ours. Love, yearning, help, and an overflowing sympathy fill at least the imagination the minute we begin to talk. And then I must emphasize his geniality. Intercourse with him is not solemn, it is not portentous, it could not be qualified by the connotations of the eloquent word "highbrow." It could more easily be summed up under the somewhat similar word "homey." Our conversations are easy, simple, and familiar, and, though I have quoted chiefly its high lights, it is always in touch with the things of every day * * * He is often amusing, often witty, though never ceasing to be solicitous, with an extraordinary tenderness * * * Wise, kind, patient, sympathetic, human, humorous, big-hearted, broad-minded, he gives one an idea of what we all may be when the evil is left out of the composition and nothing remains but goodness. It is the only instance in which I have ever come mentally face to face with what St. Paul calls the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ on the part of a man like ourselves. It shows in quite a wonderful way what a man like ourselves can come to. Even if the contact be no more than that of my imagination with an imaginary being—as the reader may easily believe—I must acknowledge it a privilege.

In the following chapters on "The New Heaven," "The New Earth," and "The New Tongue" the most of the space is devoted to transcripts or condensations of Mr. King's conversations with Henry Talbot upon such subjects as the form and manner of life in the beyond, the efforts of those who have died to return and influence the lives of those still on the earth and thus to regenerate the world, and the methods of communication between them. Several times the author indicates that he has in preparation a more extended account of his conversations with Henry Talbot.

JUSTICE AND THE POOR.

JUSTICE AND THE POOR. A study of the present denial of justice to the poor and of the agencies making more equal their position before the law, with particular reference to legal aid work in the United States. By Reginald Heber Smith. Foreword by Elihu Root. Introduction by Henry B. Pritchett. New York: The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Bulletin Number Thirteen.

COMPREHENSIVE, careful and detailed, this report on how far American law and judicial institutions secure equality of justice to the poor and to the immigrant offers a valuable checking up of the extent to which actual development has departed from the ideal of our institutions and aims in the status of the rich and poor before the law. "Just because that departure has been slow but steady and has finally made a greater gap than most of us realize, this work deserves the attention of all who believe in American ideals, and especially of all those who, in one way or another, are trying to keep the facts of American life in close touch with those ideals. In his foreword the Hon. Elihu Root calls the book "a systematic treatise and practical handbook upon the administration of justice in the United States in the direction which is at this time of the most critical importance." Mr. Root thinks we should not be overharsh in judging ourselves because our administration of justice is now in some parts of the country falling short of our ideals, and he explains why rapidly changing conditions have brought about that result. But he declares that we cannot excuse ourselves on that plea any longer, for "it is time to set our house in order," and he [illegible] we should recognize with gratitude the noble and unselfish men and women whom this book shows to have been devoting themselves to the task which most of us have been neglecting."

Henry S. Pritchett, President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, in his introduction explains the genesis of the work and the reasons why there had come to be need of such a treatise. It is, he says, the second bulletin in a series of studies of legal education and cognate matters in course of publication by the Carnegie Foundation. The work is in three parts. The first shows to what extent conditions prove the poor and the rich to be unequal before the law and analyzes and describes the three causes of this failure of justice. These three causes are the law's delays, which handicap the poor litigant; court costs and fees charged by the State, and the expense of lawyers' services. The second part reviews in detail the remedial agencies by which the poor are brought into a position before the law more nearly equal. The third part thoroughly examines and discusses these agencies and emphasizes the need for their greater development. Among these agencies are legal aid societies, voluntary defenders committees, small claims courts, domestic relations courts, industrial accident commissions. A well-merited commendation of the work of the New York Voluntary Defenders Committee mentions that it is financed by subscription. The same is true of some other organizations and institutions, while still others are paid by the State or the municipality.

"Father Tom"

An interesting biography is presented by Peter P. McLoughlin in "Father Tom"; it contains a well-told story of the life of the Rev. Thomas P. McLoughlin, a Catholic priest of the New York diocese who died Feb. 17, 1913, at New Rochelle. Father Tom had many friends and admirers in New York City, acquired for the most part during his associations with St. Stephen's in East Twenty-eighth Street, Transfiguration in Mott Street, and St. Malechy's in West Forty-ninth Street. New Schools for Old

By EVELYN DEWEY

A RECORD OF WHAT ONE COMMUNITY HAS DONE AND OTHERS CAN DO.

The North American Review says: "We can have new schools for old if we want them. . . . It is the old, old question of how to make moral energy work and spread. . . . Miss Dewey's book is as fascinating as an old-fashioned fairy-tale. . . . It ought to be in every public library, in every school library, in every Sunday school library. It ought to be talked about wherever young people may hear about it and be impressed by it. It ought to be on the moving-picture screens." $2.00

CURIOSITY—the Great Teacher

CURIOSITY is the beginning of all knowledge. Do you know any subject about which your child has not asked you a dozen questions? Let him ask as many as he likes, and be sure to answer them correctly. That is the parent's most important and most easily neglected duty. If you discourage your child's curiosity you will injure his mind, and the bright boy or girl becomes stupid or indifferent. Through curiosity Columbus discovered America. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the simplest and most natural method of helping the child to educate himself. IT ANSWERS EVERY QUESTION A CHILD CAN ASK IN PLAIN AND SIMPLE LANGUAGE. So captivating is this great original work to the mind of a child that he absorbs with little effort the profound truths and great facts of the world of knowledge, while reading its delightful pages and looking at the thousands of striking educational pictures.

YOUR CHILD IS UNIQUE

Your child is like no other child in the world. He has his own peculiar taste and need for both physical and mental food. If you put a meal before him and let him choose what agrees with him best, he will thrive. THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE is the right kind of nourishing food for the child's mind during the growing years. Give your child this remarkable, original work, and watch carefully which of the 16 Great Departments interests him most, Nature, Science, History, Biography, Astronomy, Physiology, Art, Literature, Poetry, or Manual Training. It will prove THE KEY to his natural bent, and the kind of work or profession in which he will most easily succeed.

YOUR CHILD'S CHANCE

In round numbers, what is your child's chance to become successful? If uneducated, he has one chance out of 150,000; with a common school education, 4 chances; with a high school education, 87 chances; with a college education, 800 chances; WITH THE BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE in the home, every chance. It is not a luxury, it is an absolute necessity. It is an INVESTMENT in your child's future which will pay dividends as long as he lives. ROOSEVELT'S VERSATILITY SHOWN BY HIS POSSESSIONS

List of Property in Appraiser's 300-Page Report—Gifts from Sovereigns, Writers, Citizens—Trophies, Rare Books, Art Objects, Stocks, Bonds—Simple Furniture, Hardly Any Jewelry

THE story of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's life and character might be written from a study of the vast store of gifts, trophies, books, and personal souvenirs at Sagamore Hill.

He crossed the path of few, from emperor to humble citizen, who did not in some way remember him. His own trophies prove the mighty hunter. His objets d'art show the connoisseur. His books exhibit the man of culture. His own intimate things reveal the simple man of orderly mind and habit. His home, his acres, his implements and his stock display the strong liking he had for the quiet, domestic round of life—a side that is, perhaps, the least known of the many aspects of his character.

The things he had for his own use and comfort are comparatively simple and inexpensive, in accordance with his rugged tastes. But his collection of gifts, souvenirs and trophies, aside from their intrinsic value, represent a variety of wealth and effect.

At Sagamore Hill is a pair of elephant tusks, 107 inches long, presented to Colonel Roosevelt by Emperor Menelik, valued at $3,000; another pair of tusks, sixty-three inches in length, from an elephant shot by the ex-President himself; mounted heads of lions, bears, deer, antelopes and buffalo, horns of a two-horned rhinoceros and other relics of the chase, all brought down by his own unerring gun; gifts of gold, silver, bronze, pottery, books and manuscripts presented to him in Europe by sovereign and subject, and a store of grateful remembrances given him from among his own people.

There are dozens of gifts presented to "Colonel" or "President" Roosevelt, and he had hundreds of autographed books, some of which were dedicated to him and others of which are biographies and impressions of his life and work. There are, of course, many books of his own, some of which are translated into several languages. His versatility included an artistic sense, for he had not a small though noteworthy collection of paintings, etchings, water colors, bronzes, vases, porcelains, plate and rare ivory carvings.

The library contains books of every conceivable sort—volumes of history, periodical, biographical and general; works on all the sciences, authorities on military and naval matters, political pamphlets and screeds, books on religion and dogma, textbooks and manuals, volumes on art, literature and music, classic romance and lighter fiction. He was at home with book, pen, rod, rifle, weapons of war and implements of peace. His diversity of pursuits, his wide range of interests, are all shown at Sagamore Hill.

Colonel Roosevelt's $810,607.33 estate just appraised in Nassau County fills a report of 300 typewritten pages.

NOVEMBER NIGHTS IN THE PLAYHOUSES OF BROADWAY

SECOND THOUGHTS ON FIRST NIGHTS

By ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT

"Palmy Days"

CALIFORNIA in the raw and turbulent fifties, the Far West in the days of the Vigilantes and of lonesome, swift-shooting men, grown rich and reckless with new struck pay-dirt, dusty saddlebags, heavy with the winnings of last night's faro game, bloodhounds baying ominously up the trail, and the alkali desert, with its lone path marked by wagon junk and bones—all this color and flavor of the Bret Harte stories is in "Palmy Days," the new Augustus Thomas comedy which came last week to the Playhouse like a voice out of the past.

The scene is Lone Tree—not far, as the imagination flies, from Roaring Camp—and the story unfolds in Mrs. Curley's bar, which, considering the number of times they shoot up the bars at Arroya and Alta Vista and Red Gulch, is a regular scandal for its respectability. There the commanding figure in the community is a mighty miner with a patriarchal beard and a memory as full of quotations as "Hamlet," one Cassius M. McBrayer, known among all the folk of that trail as good old Kaintuck.

McBrayer, embodied with great skill and quite unrecognizable humanity by Wilton Lackaye, has the echoes of old greenrooms in all his speech and the memory of fine old bosom-beating actors in his every step and gesture. He had not really been an actor himself, but he had been Edwin Forrest's dresser and he used to tell the chuckling crowd in Ma Curley's bar that, though he had made only one appearance on the stage in all his life, on that single occasion he got more applause and more laughter and tears in a minute than Forrest ever got in an entire season. Handkerchiefs were waved at him. Fine ladies turned to men they had never spoken to before and beat them on the back. Even an old wardrobe woman kissed him in the exhilaration of that great occasion.

That was when Forrest used him to enter King Richard's tent with the line: "A gentleman who says his name is Stanley awaits without." The stage-struck dresser went without his dinner to practice this exacting role and had it letter perfect. But, when he came on, there was the dread Forrest glaring at him, there were the bewildering footlights, the people, the crowded dress circle, and the gallery with white faces leaning out of it. He stammered, reeled, stuck, and all that came from his trembling lips, the automatic repetition of something he had had to say a thousand and one times to the amatory tragedian, was the priceless and tell-tale line: "There's a lady downstairs."

Shortly after that inauspicious début, young McBrayer had become convinced that Forrest was the father of the baby his wife was expecting. So out he cleared to roam the world and show up after many adventures as Kaintuck in Lone Tree. The first act of "Palmy Days" finds him part-owner of the richest claim on the trail, for he and his young pardner, Davy Crockett Woodford, have struck pay dirt in the Metamora. It finds him rumbling and uneasy because Davy has gone mad for love of the Cricket.

The Cricket is the young star of a barn-storming troupe consisting of herself, her mother, (a square-jawed tragedy queen,) and her stepfather, the blackface banjo king, who vamps and revamps George Christy's stuff for the mining camps of the new California. The Cricket is another Lotta, and as she dances the longhorns throw dust and hard money and watches at her feet just as later they were to throw their gold and their hearts at the feet of Lotta when the Far West was young.

It is a comically rude and primitive entertainment staged there on the improvised platform in Ma Curley's bar for the delectation of Big Lil and Bud Farrell and Ledyenworth and Texas and Fargo Bill and One-eyed Conover and all the rest, but while the Cricket is casting wistful eyes at handsome, moonstruck Davy Woodford, her mother, knowing they knocked them cold in Omaha and Kansas City, dreams of further triumphs in the East, in New York, even in London.

The climax comes when Kaintuck, bent on rescuing Davy from the toils of this painted creature, recognizes her as his own daughter—unmistakably his own daughter, for she is the living spit of Susan Blackburn McBrayer, his mother, whose portrait, painted on ivory by Stuart, is all he has clung to through the years. There follows, of course, a turbulent scene in the audience and then a scene of reunion behind the curtains. The tragedy queen has the vapors at once. "He's your damned father, dearie," she explains to the startled Cricket, and, protesting that they needn't ask her to read Dickens while sitting on a volcano, must needs be revived by a slug of whisky before she dare venture before her public with the death of Little Neil. Meanwhile the calls out front are all for a joint appearance of Kaintuck and the Cricket. Kaintuck is pushed on to the stage, promising to give the Cricket a recognizable cue for her entrance. From your vantage point behind the back-drop you can hear the old man preparing for her.

"Ye call me chief!" he thunders.

"My God," wails the tragedy queen, "he's going to give them Spartacus."

But he shifts in time to, "There's a lady downstairs," and on the roar of appreciation which that evokes out front the curtain falls.

The Play's Beginnings.

IN this new comedy of his, so neatly and simply put together, Augustus Thomas, with a skill and an affection not many of his brother playwrights could have brought to the task, catches for a few hours in the theatre of 1919 some of the stuff that used to be part of our national life, catches and holds for the younger generation some fast-fading memories of the America that was.

The play is so obviously authentic that it is worth while considering its origins and sources, a process rarely profitable in these days when, although the mimeograph press sheet may say that the idea for "The Lizard Girl" came to Marmaduke Snooks as he was lounging at his shooting lodge in the Adirondacks, you have reason to suspect that it really came to him when a manager telephoned to ask him how many hours it would take him to come downtown and naturalize a German comedy that had just arrived.

"Palmy Days" was born of a sketch produced a year ago at the Lambs' Gambol, which Arthur Hopkins directed. That sketch, based in turn on a short story dramatized by Edward Flammer, revealed Wilton Lackaye in a guise unfamiliar even to those who had known him long and seen him in many parts, from the speculator in "The Pit" to the venom-visaged Svengali in "Trilby." In this sketch he was merely a flowing-bearded lounger in a Western bar, a bibulous but chivalrous old duffer who radiated a certain wonderful kindliness. Before the evening was gone and while Lackaye was still plucking tufts of his heroic beard from his startled face, Mr. Thomas had dropped up to his dressing room to say, "Well done," and suggest ever so tentatively a play around this new characterization. "Palmy Days" grew from that, and within a year Mr. Lackaye was to come to town with the fine and striking portrait of Kaintuck, of which the public prints were all chattering last Tuesday morning.

Nothing of the original sketch is left save the astonishing Lackaye make-up and a single line of the text, a line inserted, incidentally, by Lackaye himself. It comes at the climax of the second act, when the baying dog tracks old Kaintuck to the saloon and the reckless Farrell has the drop on him. It is Big Lil who knocks up Farrell's gun and drags him away.

"In that case," says Farrell sententiously and with great scorn, "I bid you good evening."

To which bid Kaintuck replies with an elegantly imperturbable drawl:

"I sees your 'Good evening' and I raises you 'Au revoir.'"

The Sources of "Palmy Days."

SO much for the origin of "Palmy Days." Its sources are manifold and fairly familiar. The Bret Harte background is unmistakable. You would know that the Bret Harte stories had been reread for "Palmy Days," but if you had watched the whole succession of Thomas plays you would also know that he really needed no fresh course in the author of "Tennessee's Pardner" and "The Outcasts of Poker Flat." The flavor of these stories has been in some of his earlier plays, and it was a passage from Bret Harte that echoed liked a dear refrain through the memorable scene in "The Witching Hour" when the Judge—wasn't it Russ Whytal who played the part?—read over softly the quatrain:

The delicate odor of mignonette,
The ghost of a dead and gone bouquet
Is all that tells of her story; yet
Could she think of a sweeter way?

Then there's the quoting actor. The old fellow of the theatre, whose every-day speech is a patter of apt bits from old plays, is a familiar figure—a type that is passing. The young actor, whose career has consisted of eighteen motion pictures and a perfectly corking performance for four years in and out of New York in "The Broken Chain" can hardly be said to have a répertoire, indeed has never spoken a line worth remembering.

Fred Astaire, the Comically Nimble Dancer in "Apple Blossoms," at the Globe.

You may be sure that one of those strange sets of warped and coffee-stained books on "The Lives of Great Actors," such as you used to be able to pick up in the second-hand bookstores, would have furnished enough material to support the tradition of a heart-breaking Forrest which looms in the background of "Palmy Days." As for the incident of the "There's a lady downstairs" catastrophe, well, it actually happened with devastating effect in this very town some twenty years ago. The Richard stamping about his tent on that occasion was none other than the late Nat Goodwin.

And, of course, there is the inescapable suggestion of Lotta in the Cricket. Lotta's real name was Charlotte Crabtree and she was born in Grand Street seventy-two years ago, the daughter of an Englishman who kept a bookshop in Nassau Street, which was very likely in the thinly populated outskirts of the city in those days. Her professional beginnings were made as a child dancer out among the California miners at Laporte and Rabbit Valley, whither, presumably, her folks had gone in quest of the new-found gold that was drawing every adventurous spirit to the Far West. The memory of a saucy minx dancing in some forgotten San Francisco museum while a fiddler played for dear life and the uplifted miners showered their gold at her feet, that is the memory of Lotta which survives in many a tale and which must have suggested the Cricket for "Palmy Days."

The dream of the Cricket's mother came true for Lotta, for the East, New York, even London, bore witness to her eventual triumph. Even London saw and liked her playing of the Marchioness in a wild stage version of "The Old Curiosity Shop." Augustus Thomas used to see Lotta when her annual engagement in St. Louis was a great event. She was the forerunner of many a promising soubrette, and when young Minnie Maddern, in very short skirts and an impish manner that went well with her red hair, toured the Far West of the eighties in preposterous melodramas, she was following a trail which Lotta had blazed for her.

They are fast friends now, Lotta and Mrs. Fiske, for, though the actress who once set many a heart a-thumping under the red shirts in the old California mining camps has not been heard from since her withdrawal from the stage some thirty years ago, she is living in sedate retirement in Boston.

Sweet Genevieve.

THE Cricket is played by Genevieve Tobin, who emerges radiant at seventeen as a most winsome actress. There are years of experience in many rôles behind her performance as Deborah McBrayer, but she trots onto the stage of "Palmy Days" with such a daintiness, such a dewy freshness, that you would swear she had never entered a stage door before in all her days.

After that dubious intermediate period, the Tobins are growing up. It is interesting to watch this eternal renewal of the theatre. But a few seasons back and all four of them were underfoot in many a piece. Now they say the older boy is a junior at Yale, while the younger, after hopefully understudying the healthy Glenn Hunter in "Clarence," has gone off to school. Vivian Tobin, who is in "On the Hiring Line," is still little more than a child, but Genevieve has crossed the line and come into her own. She is captivating in "Palmy Days."

A Dog Story.

SPEAKING of understudies, there happened on the first night of "Palmy Days" one of those eleventh hour assumptions of a difficult rôle—going on without rehearsal, astonished and delighted managers, five-year contracts, and all that sort of thing—which occasionally enliven the theatre. Came the first night of the new Thomas comedy and there was no one to play the bloodhound who must come racing along the trail with lolloping tongue and simple earnestness, charge through the crowded bar and pick Kaintuck out of the mob there.

The producer of "Palmy Days" was confronted with a problem. Just as it is difficult to find actors nowadays with any Shakespearean répertoire, so you can no longer send around the corner and get some talented stagestruck bloodhounds as you could in the days when there were Elizas to be pursued in countless productions. The bloodhound first engaged for "Palmy Days" became indisposed as rehearsals progressed. A mammoth mastiff, coldly, purseproud, and nonchalant, was hurriedly forwarded to Atlantic City for the première there. He sauntered on to the stage with such obvious indifference on the subject of Kaintuck's whereabouts, guilt, and aroma that Wilton Lackaye was appalled. "We'd better call him Atlantic City," said that outrageous punster, "because of his bored walk." Laughter by the lesser members of the company. Feeble laughter by the worried management.

Then, when the opening night came in New York, it was the playwright's own dog who saved the day, the stunning Belgian police dog brought to him from the Army of Occupation by his son. This dog is a shaggy, affable, easily excited fellow named Luxembourg, after the duchy in which he joined Major Luke Thomas's outfit. Lux knows only one trick, but he knows that very well. When questioned as to the whereabouts of Mr. Thomas's hat, he lifts his beautiful head toward the heavens and howls till he finds it. Then he shuts up.

It was very easy. They hid him in a high dressing room at the Playhouse. They gave Kaintuck Mr. Thomas's hat to hold. At the cue toward the end of the second act, Luke Thomas, crouching over the dog, whispered, "Where's that hat?" Faintly to the audience in the theatre below came the sound of a dog hot on the scent. Nearer and nearer came the treble of his baying. Then it sounded just outside Ma Curley's bar. Then into the crowded room he plunged, shoving this way and that, straight across to where Kaintuck lounged against the bar. The scene was saved.

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

OBSERVERS of matters theatrical believe that they see an end of the indiscriminate popularity for musical shows and that something more than a chorus and an orchestra is likely to be demanded in the near future. The era of the musical comedy began two or three seasons ago, and since then not half a dozen musical comedies produced in New York have been outright failures. The result has been the tempting of a number of new producers into the field, with a consequent overproduction.

A count of the New York theatres during the coming week shows sixteen musical comedies in town—a number which is believed to set a record. Large as is the public for this entertainment, the receipts at some of the theatres are beginning to show that sixteen musical comedies cannot all exist profitably side by side. In the circumstances it is a case of the survival of the flippest, and those which are not quite so flip as their fellows are feeling the effects of the competition these nights.

Although no official announcement comes from the Belasco offices, it appears likely that the premiere of the Belasco spectacle, "The Son-Daughter," at Mr. Belasco's house will take place on Wednesday night, Nov. 19. This is the Chinese play of which Lenore Ulric will be the star. It will have its première tomorrow night in Baltimore, and will then be seen in Washington for a week.

The continued success which "East Is West" is meeting at the Astor has finally made it advisable, almost necessary, to dispatch a second organization into the provinces. Accordingly, an auxiliary troupe, in which Elsa Ryan will be the Fay Bainter, will open somewhere in Canada in about a month, and will then betake itself to the Pacific Coast. Miss Ryan was the most successful of the many who fell heir to Laurette Taylor's "Peg," and more recently has been acting the Margaret Lawrence rôle in "Tea for Three."

Salisbury Field's comedy, "Wedding Bells," will come to the Harris Theatre in another week, and simultaneously "The Dancer" will be moved to the Comedy, thus forcing "Fifty-Fifty, Ltd.," to go elsewhere. It is a fair assumption that the elsewhere will be the Vanderbilt Theatre, since the "Irene" of James Montgomery, the ultimate tenant of the Vanderbilt, is not yet ready. During the week of the 10th, also, the Shubert Theatre will offer "The Magic Melody," and Miss Rambeau will come to the Maxine Elliott, or so says the Woods office, in "The Unknown Woman." It is probable, also, that "Linger Longer Letty" will open in New York during the week of the 10th.

Sam Bernard and Irene Bordoni are presently to come forth as co-stars in "As You Were," an English musical piece which is at present being touched up here and there for American audiences.

Another pair of co-stars will be Lou Tellegen and Helen Ware. Their play, as already announced, is a little thing by Mr. Tellegen and Andor Garvey entitled "Lust of Gold."

George Barr McCutcheon and Earl Carroll are said to have collaborated upon an opus, yclept "Mr. Bingle," to be presented in January. Ralph Hers will be the principal figure in the proceedings.

At the Gaiety Theatre on Friday night Mr. Bacon and "Lightnin'" will ring up their five hundredth performance in these parts, and the end is not yet in sight. Indeed, the gross receipts are at present considerably larger than they were at the beginning of the engagement—thanks to the all-around increase in the price of theatre seats which has come about in the last year.

The five hundredth performance engagement of "Lightnin'" is, of course, exclusive of the four stagnant strike weeks, but not every attraction is equally meticulous. One play, which recently moved on to Chicago, is including two weeks of the strike period in its advertised metropolitan run.

NO SOONER SAID THAN DONE

Subject: Augustus Thomas and "Palmy Days."

1. Certain pale, drawn faces at "Palmy Days" have probably already been recognized as studious young folk, who, unable to resist enjoying Mr. Augustus Thomas long enough to study him, fluid themselves losing thereby a full major's credit toward a degree.

2. Could not "Second Thoughts on First Nights," then, offer an early "trailer" for unfortunates who, from the last of Mrs. Curley's keg on through Kaintuck's lady waiting downstairs at the final curtain, never once opened a notebook?

3. An Augustus Thomas course is entirely too noteworthy an event in the college of the American theatre for it to seem quite right that any undergraduate should miss it, either through failure to take it or inability to divorce himself from its distractingly pleasing impression.

4. Reference is not intended so much to such things as "a Christy nigger, washed up," or that delicious "Prax Italys," or that smile and tear in "she was of the earth, earthy; of the theatre, theatrical; of the female—feminine!" That is the life of the man speaking—not his method. The student can with sense and dignity just sit back while such things are going on. He could not copy that in a hundred years. He could only hope that some day he might have lived a little of it, too.

5. But there is method in the adroitness with which the painted ivory adventures from hand to hand, and from heart to heart. In the fine timeliness which set the dog a-baying. In the workmanship which topsy-turvied the strollers' stage in the Lone Tree bar around from front to back as an expedient for showing good souls and bad souls turning themselves inside out.

6. Could not "Second Thoughts on First Nights" hearken unto Israel, and dispose itself illuminatingly against a very considerable despair?

ELSIE JANIS'S BOOK

IN so far as the American theatre was concerned Elsie Janis was unquestionably the heroine of the war. She was the first American entertainer in France, and she stayed long. At all events, she stayed long enough to gather material for a sizable volume, ("The Big Show," Cosmopolitan,) which is fairly brimming over with her experiences on the edge of the war.

Incidentally, Miss Janis is not putting the war entirely behind her, for she has gathered together a company of ex-service men who, had also been more or less of the theatre, and with them as her support she will tread the boards once more in Baltimore a week from tomorrow night. "Elsie Janis and Her Gang" is the name of the entertainment, and presumably New York is to see it before the season is over.

This, take it from "The Big Show," was Miss Janis's first experience with France in wartime:

"Arriving in Bordeaux, (such a pretty name! suggesting grapes, red wine, &c., and looking very much like Jersey City, only more so,) we were a little disappointed. I, for one, expected American troops to be there and decide whether we should land or not. The first soldiers we saw, however, were German prisoners, very pleased to see us or anything else but the front-line trenches. Two Y. M. C. A. men were charming to us—and I then found out that where there are Young Christians there are young Henry Fords. We leaped into one with joy, and went to the hotel, where we had breakfast with no meat, no bread except of dusky hue, no butter, no sugar, no jam, no nothing—and very little of that—but we were in France! And I could have existed a week on joy!"

She made her first appearance before the men at the Pavillon, a little hotel in Paris which had been taken over by the American soldiers.

"They cheered so long and so loud when I appeared that I nearly burst into tears, but finally burst into song instead—which is nearly as sad. However, to them I was Melba and Paviowa. I sang 'When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parlez-Vous Francais,' which was quite unknown at the time, for my first song. I told some stories—sang 'Cleopatra'—more stories—then 'The Ragtime Strutters' Ball,' and finished with 'Over There,' in which they all joined.

"Of course, the real joy to me was that they liked just me and did not ask me to imitate some one else. I was so proud of that. I was on about thirty-five minutes that night, and when I finally tore myself away (I did not want to leave at all!) I went home, sat down, and cried with sheer joy! Mother cried, too; in fact, we enjoyed ourselves a lot. * * *"

This entry was made at Chaumont:

"Went to the camp hospital, where they have a gang with the mumps. Having had them, I went in and gave a show. They were so grateful, as they thought they would not see me. Went into the officers' mess—said good-bye and left Mailly at about 2. Arrived Chaumont at 5. Had a bite of dinner in our room. Nearly froze. Asked for a fire and nearly started another war. Went to Y hut, gave an hour's show to about 2,000. Some one yelled for me to imitate Will Rogers. I said I couldn't because I had no rope—and some cowboy produced one. I was 'stung,' but made it go and danced in it. Riot!"

At Issoudun:

"We had to fight for our room—singular, please note. A comic room with two serio-comic beds—covered with two of those enormous comfortables that the French hide their beds under—about two feet thick. And, once under, your best friend could not find you. If as a child you have ever hidden under a haystack you may grasp the idea.

"We left the hotel at 5 and drove out to the flying fields. After riding over the road I was ready to fly anywhere with any one rather than return over the same road. * * *

"We went on to Pontex. The most awful road now, which used to be the famous road to Biarritz. We arrived at about five. Such a dump. Even the officers still sleeping in tents. I had a fearful grouch when I arrived, but when I saw our boys arriving, having marched ten miles from the depths of the woods, smiling, singing and cheering, I felt so glad to be able to be there, and I think I gave one of the best shows I've ever given, in the middle of the village square, with just a little platform with a tent cover over it. Rather like a Punch and Judy show. Those boys went wild, and they had nothing on me. * * *

"Dined at the General's house; he was away—probably at the war. Gave the show in an old château. My! how I would like to meet a young château for a change.

"The Count and Countess who lived in this aged one sent me lovely flowers from their garden. Their young son, about fourteen, presented them with his best 'those wishing to view the body' expression, but when I thanked him in French he became the real smiling Frenchman. Funny how English saddens the Latin people! * * *

"We came back to the hotel to dinner—if you could call it that. Napoleon said an army travels on its stomach. Well, I'm glad the army is not stopping in this hotel. They would never make the front-line trenches, let alone Germany.

"Tonight, went out to another crowd who were just going into the line. The band met me, and what a band! They marched ahead of us, playing 'Over There.' Gave the show on a platform built up against the local plaza, which was one story high with a big shell hole in the roof, making a perfect ventilating system. A boche plane came over and the boys yelled, 'Come on down, you poor boob, and see a good show!' They were very excited about going into the line, and all asked what I wanted them to bring back. I said, 'Yourselves, please.' * * *

"The commander of the squadron looked about 18, and is in reality an old gent of 23. He had at least six decorations. He looked so young I thought he must have won them at baby shows, but no, he is a wonderful 'boche buster,' and though an American joined the French army as a simple poilu in 1914. Oh, this is a great war!

"P. S.—Tragic note. The baby 'boche buster' is married! ! ! !"

At Rangeval:

"We had tea afterward in the nice warm kitchen of an old monastery; a sweet little Frenchwoman insisted on my warming my soaked self by the fire. I did, and then sang for her 'Joan of Arc' in French. She wept bitterly, not at my singing, but because she had lost her 'man' in the war. She showed us his picture and we wept with her. The boys came trooping in. I sniffed guiltily and murmured something about catching cold."

And, finally, she met General Pershing:

"Some one suggested that I should sing him a song, as he had been away when I trouped in Chaumont and had to leave again the next day for some front. I hated the idea, and felt very much as I did when, as 'Little Elsie,' mother had made me do my imitations in a well-known manager's office, but I told a story and the lid was off. Mother had to stop me—I was so carried away by that big man's laugh that I could have gone on forever. When I had finished, he said, 'Elsie, when you first came to France some one said you were more valuable than a whole regiment—then some one raised it to a division, but I want to tell you that if you can give our men this sort of happiness you are worth an army corps."

THE NEW PLAYS

A WEEK which bid fair to offer three or four new offerings in the Broadway temples has suffered a pair of postponements.

As a result thereof there will be but one new production in the theatres during the week—a musical version of an old friend.

A generation ago Clyde Fitch's "The Blue Mouse" caused something of a sensation; it remains to be seen, in these days of lingerie farces, how big a splash it can create today. For "The Little Blue Devil" is "The Blue Mouse" tricked out with tunes—the tricking by Harold Atteridge and the tunes by Harry Carroll.

The cast will be headed by Bernard Granville and Lillian Lorraine, and will also include Jack McGowan, Edward Martindel, Wilfred Clarke, Eleanor Gordon, Anne Sands, Marion Mosby, Eddie Cox, W. H. Powers, Edward Bisland, John Geier, and James Buckley.

The announcement from the Neighborhood Playhuse that the Lovel-Kenmore production of Ibsen's "When We Dead Awake" is the first to be made in this country has been challenged, and with no little ground, by Maurice Campbell. Mr. Campbell produced the play at the Knickerbocker Theatre on March 7, 1905, with a cast including Frederick Lewis, Dorothy Donnelly, and Frank Losee. Mr. Lovel's production, however, is the first in this country to be given by English actors in Grand Street.

Sunday night was never so prosperous for the theatre men as it is at present, and accordingly ever so sacred "concerts" will take place tonight in the following houses: Century, New Amsterdam, Fulton, Selwyn, Winter Garden, Forty-fourth Street, Lyric, and Central.

William Rock, without Frances White, will be the week's headliner at the Palace Theatre in "a typical Rock entertainment." Willie Bard, who has apparently found himself, will be on the program for another week.

SEVEN—ADLERS—SEVEN

Jacob Adler, now 65 years of age, hopes to return to this country from England in a few months to play Shylock for the first time in English. Adler is one of the best-known actors on the Yiddish stage, and is internationally famous for his Shylock. At present he is playing in London, where his wife and two of his daughters, Sonia and Frances, are now appearing with him.

His other two daughters, Celia and Julia, are at present playing in this country—the former in Yiddish in the productions of the Jewish Art Theatre at the Garden Theatre, and the latter in English in the Theatre Guild production of "The Faithful" at the Garrick. The seventh of the theatrical Adlers is Jacob Adler's niece, Francine Larrimore Adler, now appearing in "Scandal" under the name of Francine Larrimore.

Jacob Adler was born in Odessa, Russia, where he established himself as an actor in the Russian language. It has been a matter of thirty-five years, however, since he acted in Russia. The four daughters have all played leading rôles with him at various times.

WHO'S WHO ON THE STAGE

THE stage beginnings of Sidney Toler, whose performance as the detective-butler in "On the Hiring Line" has been one of the comedy high spots of the week, were beset by more than the customary trials and tribulations, and the story of his pre-Broadway fight for recognition is one of the most interesting and highly colored of any player who has recently come this way.

He got his stage start, as has more than one actor, in the small repertoire companies—the kind that tour the towns of a few thousand population in the wilds of the Middle West—and his early associates were actors to whom Des Moines was in the nature of a theatrical capital.

Toler's ancestors were among the first settlers of Virginia; his family moved from Richmond to Wichita, Kan., while the hero of these few words was a boy, and it was from Wichita that young Toler escaped to Kansas City, at the age of 17, when he had made up his mind to be an actor. Professing to have extensive experience, he waited upon the manager of an organization which was rehearsing a lurid melodrama entitled "The Master Man" preparatory to an invasion of the hinterland.

A stony-hearted sheriff closed in on "The Master Man" company several weeks later, and young Toler joined a company in Orrick, Mo. The manager of a rep. show touring the waste places of Iowa then wired him $15 to join up as leading man. Toler spent $5 of this on railroad fares and pinned the remaining $10 in the inner pocket of his vest. This organization remained intact for three weeks, though no salaries were paid. Then one Saturday night, the manager, finding himself nearer home than he had been in twenty years, hired a buggy and drove off into the darkness, leaving art and his players to struggle alone and unaided against a cruel fate.

Toler reached into his vest pocket, unpinned the $10 bill, and started a new organization known as Sidney Toler's Gargantuan Galaxy of Peerless Players.

The company moved on from one small town to another, leaving behind unpaid board bills and a miscellaneous collection of trunks and treasured articles of jewelry. Finally they reached a town which had a new theatre which the organization was to open. By this time the only worthwhile articles still in the possession of the outfit were the star's cape overcoat and high hat. The Mayor met them at the station and advanced Toler twenty dollars without being asked for assistance, and, being the owner of the weekly newspaper, agreed to run a full page ad free of charge. The manager of the theatre promised to give him all of the receipts if the gross didn't come to $200 on the first night.

"They'd never had a show under a roof in the town before," said Toler the other night. "My share that week was $1,100. I paid my company three weeks' salary, sent back money to settle the board bills and was prepared to start out with a clean slate. My actors couldn't stand prosperity, however. When Monday morning came they had all vanished—they had gone home. I moved on to Kansas City prepared to spend the remainder of my life in luxury and ease on the remaining $450."

It lasted two weeks, and thereupon Toler joined the Corse Payton company, with which he remained for four years, being subsequently installed as leading man of the Lee Avenue Academy in Brooklyn, where he became a great neighborhood favorite. Julia Marlowe heard of him and sent for him. She was at that time ready to rehearse "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and she cast Toler for the Duke of Buckingham, a rôle which he played throughout the New York run. He subsequently became leading man of the Columbia Theatre stock company in Brooklyn, and then went into an operatic stock company at the Orpheum Theatre, singing baritone rôles. Charles Dillingham engaged him the following season to play a character comedy part with Frank Daniels in "The Office Boy."

About this time he became convinced that there was a great opportunity for a stock company in Portland, Me. He organized one, with himself as leading man, and played for three consecutive seasons in that city. From there he moved to Halifax, where he remained for five years, playing nine months a season and providing the only dramatic entertainment available in that city. Incidentally he became as well known throughout the Maritime Provinces as the Prime Minister.

Toler is playwright as well as actor. He has written a number of plays which have been presented by stock companies—plays especially designed to fit such organizations. One of these, a timely war play entitled "The Man They Left Behind," enjoyed a phenomenal success two seasons ago, having been presented by sixty-seven companies in the space of three months and played simultaneously by eighteen companies in a single week. This is believed to be a record.

In association with Marion Short he also wrote "The Golden Age," tried out last Summer in Atlantic City with Helen Hayes in the leading rôle, and scheduled for a Broadway production before the present season is over.

EVER since Charles Winninger gave his memorable imitation of Leo Ditrichstein in the 1916 Cohan revue he has been marked as a mimic of unusual ability. A few inveterate playgoers whose theatregoing has extended even to the Sunday night war benefits know also that he is an excellent low comedian, and it is on record that he is a musician and an acrobat as well. Audiences of all sorts now have a chance to reacquaint themselves with Mr. Winninger's varied talents in the Winter Garden's new "Passing Show." Among the evidences thereof his impersonation of Lionel Barrymore in "The Jest" is perhaps entitled to honorable mention.

Mr. Winninger, as is generally known, is the husband of Blanche Ring, also a "Passing Show" satellite. Like Sidney Toler, whose history is recorded immediately above and to the left, Winninger spent years in the small repertoire companies of the Middle West before he was given his chance in the larger playhouses. It is only a matter of seven or eight years since Winninger, one of some half a dozen actors in his family, was a member of a small company touring the State of Wisconsin.

Blanche Ring, at the time, was playing at the Garrick Theatre in Chicago, and her comedian, Lee Kohlmar, tripped over a chair at a critical moment and broke his leg. A substitute was sought at the theatrical agencies, but no one was found capable of filling the vacancy. Finally the manager of the company, L. J. Rodrigues, recalled that an organization called the Winninger company existed, and that a comedian of sorts was said to be at the head of it.

With the aid of a long distance telephone the company was finally located at Kegosha. Rodriguez inquired for "Mr. Winninger," and was greeted with "Which Mr. Winninger?"

"Is there more than one?" was the next question.

"Five," was the answer. "All brothers."

"Well," continued Rodrigues, "we want the comedian."

"We're all comedians," said the voice at the other end.

"Well, we want the good one."

"I'm the good one," was the uncompromising reply.

"What's your name?"

"Charlie."

"And you're sure you're the good one?"

"Positive," was the answer.

"All right. Pack up and come to Chicago right away."

Winninger caught the next train for Chicago, and twelve hours after his arrival gave an almost perfect performance of a difficult rôle.

In point of fact, Charles Winninger prides himself more upon being a musician than an actor. His father was a court musician in Vienna, and, when he first came to America, made a living with his violin in Milwaukee. Of the five brothers, Charles is the only one who was born in America.

One day some one told the elder Winninger that a farm was the proper place to raise a family of five boys, so the family moved to a none too prosperous "estate" near Black Creek, Wisconsin. The father built his cabin with his own hands, and with his sons did his best to clear the ground of stumps and boulders. But his fondness for the fiddle persisted. He began to give musical entertainments, and presently his five boys were appearing with him in the Town Hall of a metropolis called Wausau. Thence the family made its way to the Lyceum platform. Charles's instrument was the trombone, and still is.

The family finally got on the vaudeville stage, and after various adventures, which included the training of young Charles as an acrobat, branched out into dramatic sketches. It was from this work that Winninger reached Chicago and fame.

During the war Winninger was made a bandmaster, with the rank of First Lieutenant, and had organized a regimental band of fifty, with sailing orders already received, when the armistice was signed.

The most deadly blows are those that are dealt through tender words.

The most hideous revenge is that which is wrought with a kiss.

It is thus that Henri Durand slew souls in

"The Vengeance of Durand."

For ten years Henri Durand tortured his wife every day with—love. But with love that was mixed with jealousy. Every day was like a year—a year whose days are long. His jealous love led to the most tragic of deaths, the death of not merely a heart, but of a soul—and other souls.

"The Vengeance of Durand" is a story of vast love, vaster vengeance, and in the end—supreme happiness. For Destiny heals all wounds.

"The Vengeance of Durand,"

on which the story is founded, is one of Rex Beach's greatest, and the picture is the most impressive in which Alice Joyce has ever appeared.

Marion Durand was raviahing—more adorable than Venus. It was because of this gift from Heaven that she laid her life on the altar of a husband's jealousy. It was for this that Henri Durand conjured the most diabolical revenge—a revenge wrought with a kiss.

"For all men slay the thing they love."

Some do it with a smile; some with a tender word.

The hideous heart-blows that are struck with words are shown in Alice Joyce's big special production,

"The Vengeance of Durand."

It is a vengeance that sears human souls.

A great, pulsating cross-section of life itself, carried in rapidly increasing crescendo to a big, smashing, crashing climax—that's

"The Vengeance of Durand."

Next to love, vengeance is the strongest impulse that can enter a human brain. The bigger the mind, the more terrible may be its evil desire.

"The Vengeance of Durand"

is a screen masterpiece that cuts into the darkest cavern of imagery, and brings forth the spectacle of vengeance incarnate.

Only those fear death who have never died.

This thought, chasing visions over the brain of a man, drove him to plan and build spiritual death for others. It was his mania. It was his consecrated task—to slay a soul.

A soul, murdered!

The body untouched, but the spirit destroyed.

Such a thing as this is done in a tremendous film from the story by Rex Beach.

It reveals Alice Joyce in a role that has infinite scope.

You will live this picture!

Your attention will be held every ticking second!

Henri Durand was a man to be envied, for he was one whose wife loved him devotedly. But it is not well for some men to be envied—or loved. These things put only jealousy in Durand's heart. From jealousy grew a plant more poisonous still—vengeance.

To the Public:

The Capitol theatre begs to express its appreciation of the generous patronage that has been accorded this enterprise—a patronage that has filled each of its more than 5,300 seats at every performance since the doors were opened on Oct. 24—and more particularly to acknowledge with gratification the many kind expressions that have been made concerning the structure, the programme offered and the general policies of the institution.

For the new week a stage and screen star of the first magnitude, Nazimova, will be seen in a screen version of the successful drama, "The Brat," filmed at the Metro studios. This great Russian artiste will be supported by other motion picture attractions—scenic, educational and comedy in character.

Ned Wayburn's Demi Tasse Revue will continue to be the stage offering, and Arthur Pryor's Capitol Band of 70 pieces will contribute a musical programme.

TODAY four big Sunday concerts will be given—at noon, 3, 6 and at 9 P. M., each of three hours, consisting of composite programmes including the best features of the foregoing bill. The matinee prices will be 50 cents to $1.50 and the performance continuous, enabling patrons to come when they please and leave when they like between the hours of 12 and 5:45. The same conditions govern the evening performance from 6 until nearly midnight, with prices ranging from 50 cents to $2.

Throughout the week matinees are given from noon to 5:45 P. M., at popular prices ranging from 30 cents to $1, with the de luxe programme commencing at 2 o'clock; evening prices 50 cents to $1.50, with the performance continuous from 6 to 11.15 and the de luxe programme commencing at 8 and so arranged that late diners arriving after 9 may enjoy the Revue and feature picture complete. Reserved Seats always 8 weeks in advance.

The management trusts that these policies may continue to enjoy the same degree of approval that characterized their introduction.

IN THE NEWS NET.

BOOTH TARKINGTON, whom some have regarded as holding the last literary citadel against the onrushing movies, has capitulated, or else he has become convinced that the screen has improved to the point of revealing artistic possibilities. At any rate, Mr. Tarkington, who has hitherto resisted all pecuniary temptations to write for motion pictures, and who was recently quoted by Channing Pollock as unwilling to associate himself with picture production, has promised Samuel Goldwyn to write twelve two-reel comedies in which Penrod and William Sylvanus Baxter are to have a cousin named Edgar. The pictures are to be known as the Edgar Comedies, and they are to be the product of Mr. Tarkington's idea of what moving pictures should be as well as of his delightful conception of Young America. It is reported that he will spend some time at the Goldwyn Studios co-operating with directors, actors, cutters, and such technical folk, and, perhaps, as occasion may require, exercising powers of initiation and veto. And, according to Mr. Goldwyn's publicity department, Mr. Tarkington is possessed of some pretty definite ideas as to what moving pictures should and should not be.

Many, no doubt, on hearing of the novelist's proposed adventure, will pay tribute to Mr. Goldberg's appreciation of human nature and remark somewhat flippantly, "They all flop sooner or later," but this will not mean any lack of interest in the news and certainly every one acquainted with what Mr. Tarkington has done in books and on the stage will expectantly await the application of his talents to the screen.

From a rather indefinite statement received by this department it is gathered that William A. Brady is planning to produce motion pictures again. Mr. Brady was formerly Director General of the World Film Corporation, and more recently an independent producer responsible for "The Whip," "Stolen Orders" and "Little Women." He has never severed his connection with the motion picture industry, but since his last picture his activities have borne more directly on the stage than on the screen. Now, it seems, he is to devote considerable time to the making of films, his tentative program calling for from four to six pictures a year. He owns the motion picture rights to a number of plays, including the celebrated, or notorious, "Way Down East," "The Man Who Came Back," "Bunty Pulls the Strings," "Forever After," and "At 9:45," and it is suggested that he may use some of them as material for his films. The statement from his office says they are "available" for motion pictures, but whether for his own or some one else's is not stated.

Samuel Goldwyn has taken up the subject of producers of pictures who become exhibitors also by issuing a warning to exhibitors that he, too, may obtain theatres for his productions if—well, if he finds that that is the only way by which he can keep open a satisfactory avenue to the public. Mr. Goldwyn does not mention the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its "friendly interests" in control of the Rialto, Rivoli, and other theatres, but he talks about a "struggle for monopoly," and says that "some of the most moneyed concerns in the industry" have been led to acquire theatres. He doesn't like the idea of competing with exhibitors, but admits that, "with various other concerns seeking to secure exclusive representation for their productions in certain cities by combining with exhibitors even to the point of buying a substantial interest in their theatres," the Goldwyn company "may be compelled to build theatres" to protect itself.

Robert C. Bruce's Great Dane is dead, the big, gentle dog who has been so much a part of Bruce scenics. Those who have developed a real affection for the animal will feel as if one of their favorite screen players had died. They will experience the sensation of a real loss—and how lonely the man and his horse will be wandering without their friendly companion.

Only a few details of the dog's death have been received. According to report, he slipped from an ice floe in Alaska, where Mr. Bruce was taking pictures, and never rose to the surface. But although the king is dead, his followers may still say, Long live the King, for the Wanderer has left a son and heir, who will in time take his place.

D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" broke all attendance records in its week at the Strand, according to report. To do this it had to pass the best figures for pictures featuring Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford.

Organizations of exhibitors to acquire their own pictures are periodic in their birth, and the latest has been launched by Lewis J. Selznick, President of Select, under the name of National Picture mutualized and co-operative organization which will make and buy its own productions for exhibition."

"Eyes of Youth," as converted into a motion picture, with Clara Kimball Young in the leading rôle, was shown to invited spectators at the Hotel Astor last Thursday afternoon.

Ralph Block, who for the last six months has been in charge of the Goldwyn Company's publicity, has been appointed Director of Advertising and Publicity for the company.

George G. Shor, formerly a New York newspaperman and more recently a Major in the 33d Division, has been appointed director of publicity of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres to succeed Ralph Edmunds, who has resigned to accept a position abroad.

Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, has indorsed a set of one-reel films to be released by the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for the purpose of Americanization. The pictures, it is said, are designed to "interpret the spirit of America, as it is revealed in education, commerce, governmental activities, and industry."

The annual Newman Traveltalks will begin at Carnegie Hall on Sunday, Nov. 16. The subjects this year will be "Alsace-Lorraine," "Occupied Germany," "Belgium Redeemed," "Poland Restored," and "France Victorious."

"Male and Female," which is the movieized title of Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton," will be shown in New York soon. Cecil B. Demille, who made the picture, and Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson, who played its principal parts, are expected to come here for the opening.

Look in 10 Days
See how clean the teeth look—how they glisten. Then you will know what film removal means.

This is to urge a ten-day test of a tooth paste which combats the film.

High authorities have proved it. Five years of tests have placed it beyond question. Leading dentists everywhere are urging its adoption.

Compare the results with your old methods, and let your own teeth decide.

Film Destroys Teeth

That slimy film which you feel on your teeth causes most tooth troubles. Every modern dentist knows that. Dental science, for many years, has sought a way to end it.

That film is what discolors, not the teeth. It is the basis of tartar. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay.

Millions of germs breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea. So the major object in cleaning teeth is to keep them free from film.

Old-time methods fail to do that. Teeth still discolor, still decay, as millions of people know. The reason is that brushing does not end the film.

The film is clinging. It gets between the teeth, enters crevices and stays. Day and night, month after month, it is a potential source of danger.

Now a Way to End It

Science now has found a way to end it. Five years of tests have proved this. The way is now embodied in a dentifrice called Pepsodent. And we urge you to see what it does.

Pepsodent is based on pepsin, the digestant of albumin. The film is albuminous matter. The object of Pepsodent is to dissolve it, then to constantly combat it.

But pepsin must be activated, and the usual method is an acid harmful to the teeth. So pepsin long seemed barred. But science has now found a harmless activating method. It is made use of in Pepsodent.

Now millions of teeth are daily cleaned as they never were before. Try the method ten days on yours.

Send this coupon for a 10-Day Tube. Use like any tooth paste. Note how clean your teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the slimy film. See how the teeth whiten as the fixed film disappears.

Watch the results for a few days. Read in our book how they come about. Then decide for yourself what tooth paste you and yours should use.

DOING SOMETHING FOR AMERICANS

By RICHARD ALDRICH

THE effort to "do something" for American composers seems to be advancing toward accomplishment in some directions. Givers of song recitals apparently "do" most in bulk for American composers; whether it is most in quality is not so certain. There are few recitals that do not end with a group of American songs, half a dozen at least. Publishers advertise them on the programs. The orchestras have been doing something for American composers; more than ever since the war began. Last season five of the great orchestras, two in New York and those in Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago, put American compositions on their programs some sixty-five times. This encouraging and significant fact will prove to be still more encouraging and significant if the best of these are found to call for a repetition this season and subsequent seasons.

Where the American composer gets the least opportunity is apparently in the department of chamber music. Perhaps he himself has cultivated this field less assiduously or less successfully than others. It is a difficult field in itself; and the agencies for performing chamber music are less numerous and less influential, also more timid, than agencies in other fields.

The Society for the Publication of American Music seeks to aid the American composer by providing him an opportunity of getting his works published. Music that is published, it is justly considered, has a better chance of being performed than that which is sent around in manuscript copies. It is accepted into the literature of the art in a way closed to it when it exists only in manuscript. The music and the composer both have gained a better standing, other things being equal, when there is publication.

An undertaking apparently somewhat similar to the task the Society for the Publication of American Music sets itself was begun a year or so ago in England by the Carnegie Trust, which sets aside a sum of money for publishing the new works of English composers.

The Russians in the old days before the war, when there were Russian composers in Russia with their heads on their shoulders, had their Belaieff, who did much for them. Belaieff was a rich lumber merchant who had a deep interest in music, especially Russian music—deep enough to turn him from lumbering to music publishing. He established a publishing house that brought out in print, in the course of some twenty years, about 2,000 compositions of the younger Russian composers. This did much toward spreading a knowledge of them throughout the rest of the world. When he died, in 1904, Belaieff left an endowment for his publishing house, which was thereafter carried on under the musical direction of a committee of prominent Russian musicians.

No doubt Russian music owes much to Belaieff, even if everything that he published was not of great importance or lasting value. Much music that is published, even under the most dignified auspices, has neither. Some music of this class "pays", during its short life. The classics pay even more handsomely in their immortality. What for the most part does not pay is the contemporary production in the larger forms of serious musicians whose names are not yet famous; and yet these productions must be heard and, if possible, see the light, if the art is not to stagnate and die of inanition.

Now there are public spirited publishers in this country, as well as in other countries, who feel it a part of their duty to publish a certain number of new works of high aspiring composers, which, in the nature of things as they are at present, cannot be expected to be profitable, even if the works are good. Honor and appreciation are due to such firms. But they cannot do this too frequently or make it more than a certain small proportion of their business. If they did they would have to go out of business, and the last state of the high aspiring composer would be worse than his first. And so some other agency is required to get his works into print, into the hands of the interested buyer or the willing performer and hence into the ear of the musical public.

The Society for the Publication of American Music aims to be that agency; and to do its work with regard to the highest musical standard and without deserving the criticism directed against the "coddling" of Americans. Not having yet gotten into running order, practical considerations require it to limit its work in the beginning to the publication of American chamber music. Songs and piano pieces of the shorter genre are taken care of by the present arrangements of publishers; perhaps in some cases, too well. The new society feels no need to be solicitous about them. Orchestral music is expensive matter to publish and is left for the future accession of financial strength.

The society is made up of life members who pay $100 and of annual members who pay $5 a year. Thereby will be furnished the funds for publishing compositions of sufficient merit. The works to be published will be selected by a committee of musicians of high standing. Composers will submit their works to the committee anonymously, as competitors for a prize submit them to a jury. They are to be judged on their merits, and the influence of a well-known name and established reputation will not work to the advantage of any one over an unknown aspirant whose talent is still to be made publicly known.

There will be an advisory committee, to examine works sent in, which will select from the whole number all that it considers worthy of publication and report them to the Board of Directors. At a later joint meeting the Advisory Board and the Board of Directors will listen to a private hearing of the selected compositions and make a final decision as to those which will be published during the current season. It is also proposed, if practicable, to give the members of the society a hearing of the compositions before they are published. When they appear each member will receive one copy. If the membership is large enough, there should be funds not only for printing and distribution, but also for giving the composers a substantial royalty.

It may be noted that the term "American composers" is liberally interpreted, and is held to include "citizens or residents of the United States of America."

A statement issued by the society declares that "it is not the object to fondle American composers who need a stimulus to composition; the man who ceases to compose because he finds it difficult to get his works performed or published has not the proper stuff in him as a composer." Nor is it the object to help the American composer of music that is "technically crude, barren of inspiration and forgetful of artistic ideals"; nor to put undue pressure on artists and organizations to perform American composers' music merely because it is American.

Just how far the plans here outlined will tend to the advancement of American music remains to be seen. The fundamental condition for the advancement of American music is the existence of vigorous talent or of genius, properly trained and directed into fruitful fields among American musicians. No amount of enticement toward composition by the facilitation of printing and publishing or of performance will result in the production of fine works of art unless the creative impulse is already there and functioning by itself. This seems sufficiently self-evident; and yet it is sometimes overlooked, or the standard of judgment is made indulgent, in the haste to see American music recognized as the equal of any other music, or in the pride of recognizing the accomplishment of fellow-countrymen or fellow-townsmen. American musicians have been earnestly and repeatedly assured that they are the peers of the foremost in musical creation; that they have been held back by prejudice in favor of foreigners no better than they; that all sorts of difficulties are placed in their way, intentionally, by the operation of this prejudice, or unintentionally, by the lack of facilities open to the composers of other nations for becoming known by publication or performance, and hence winning immediate admiration and success.

The Society for the Publication of American Music will be in a position to stop a part of this now, and more of it hereafter, as it gains strength, and to put the whole contention to the test. It will help to remove the prejudice, if any exists, and will afford the facilities that are lacking. It sets forth its belief that it will be able to give an impetus to the spread of American music and to co-ordinate the work of artists and musical organizations heretofore working to this end. New and meritorious compositions will reach all parts of the country comparatively fresh from the desks of the writers, coming into the hands of musical amateurs as well as of professionals; a "patriotic movement in the best sense of the word." The society has already issued its invitation to composers to submit compositions to be selected for publication for the season of 1919-20. They will be received by the Secretary until Nov. 15.

A grave responsibility rests upon the advisory and directing boards in the selection of the compositions to be published. If the cause of American music is really to be forwarded by influences outside of itself, publication should be made only of works able to stand by their own merits the severest tests of excellence; able really to be put alongside of what has been done by contemporary workers elsewhere in the world and maintain a place there. Nothing will be gained by publishing what is thought to be good considering that it is American, or "good enough" or what may be thought to denote "promise" without the instant performance, or what may be deemed desirable to put forth for any other reason than its own intrinsic excellence and superiority to the level of mediocrity and amateurishness that ever art always has to fight against.

It is clearly understood from the disclosures of the society's plans and aims that these are its purposes. The musicians who are intrusted with carrying out those purposes are such as will establish a high standard; so everybody will feel assured. May they keep a grim inflexibility in maintaining it. These are the ones

President, John Alden Carpenter; Vice Presidents, Mrs. H. H. Beach, Rubin Goldmark, Edwin T. Rice; Acting Treasurer, Burnet Corwin Tuthill; Secretary, William Burnet Tuthill; and also Eric De Lamarter, A. Walter Kramer, Daniel Gregory Mason and Oscar G. Sonneck. The Advisory Board which will in the first instance examine the works submitted for publication is made up of Georges Barrère, Harold Bauer, Adolfo Betti, George W. Chadwick, Rubin Goldmark, Hugo Kortschak, Frederick A. Stock, and Deems Taylor. As honorary members are named Messrs. Betti, Chadwick and Stock and Edgar Stillman Kelley, Charles Martin Loeffler and Arthur Whiting. The address of the Secretary is 185 Madison Avenue, New York.

And now comes another project for the aid and encouragement of American composers, among others for the scheme is not limited to Americans, native or resident. Artur Bodanzky has announced that in the month of April, 1920, he will devote six morning rehearsals of the New Symphony Orchestra to playing works of unnamed composers, and on their approval by a committee of musicians he will include as many as possible of these works in his programs for 1920-21. The scores which composers wish to submit must be sent by registered mail to the manager of the New Symphony Orchestra, 25 West Forty-second Street, New York City, who will forward to the owner a receipt. The manuscript must not contain any signs or markings by which it would be possible to identify the source. Even the title must be confined to a simple statement of the nature of the composition—for example, "Symphonic Poem," or "Scherzo."

It is expected that the committee will be complete by Jan. 1, at which time the scores will be submitted for choice. Probably the first thirty works, based on the ratings given them by the committee, will be played.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

Samuel Baldwin in today's free organ program at the City College will include Dudley Buck's concert variations on "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Tertius Noble will open an hour of organ music free to the public at St. Thomas's Church tonight with three compositions by Arthur Foote.

Jean J. Markar has given to the Armenian Fund his song "Columbia's Call," of which free copies may be had from the French High Commission.

SONGS AND SINGERS.

Jacob Koppel Sandler's famous song, "Ehli, Ehli," has been published in the original version, with a cover bearing a portrait of the composer.

David Bispham is the author of "A Quaker Singer's Recollections," which the Macmillan Company has announced for publication this Fall.

Bruno Huhn is composer of two sacred songs, "Lo, This Is Our God," issued by the Boston Music Company, and "The Promised Land," by Ditson's.

"Faust" and "Geisha" Stay.

"Faust" and "The Geisha" are contrasting bills at the Park Theatre this week, as if to prove the versatility of the Society of American Singers. "Faust" will be sung Monday, Friday, and twice on Saturday, the matinée cast having Grace Wagner and Craig Campbell, while the others engage Marcella Craft, Francis Maclennan, and Herbert Waterous. "The Geisha," with Teen Mei, Gladys Caldwell, and Frank Moulan, will be sung Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights and at the special matinée on Tuesday, Election Day.

THE WEEK'S MUSIC

MORE than a month after the start of New York's unprecedentedly early concert season, the time has come for what would formerly have been its opening events, the resumption in the next fortnight of all the great orchestral series and then the opera. Before that, for the first time on record, there will have been already a hundred concerts in town.

The Volpe Symphony Orchestra is giving this afternoon the second of its matinées at the Hippodrome, with John Powell, pianist, in Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasy"; Jacques Malkin, violin, in Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Caprice," and Cantor Bernard Wolff in tenor airs from "Tosca" and "Pagliacci."

Reinald Werrenrath, baritone, sings this afternoon at Carnegie Hall, where his program includes an air from Mozart's "Figaro," others of Falconieri and Peri, transcribed by Floridia, and three "Salt Water Ballads" by Frederick Keel to lyrics by John Masefield.

Marvin Maazel, pianist, at Aeolian Hall today will play Beethoven's sonata, Opus 26; works of Schubert and Brahms, a Chopin group, including two arrangements for left hand by Godowsky, and others of Rubin Goldmark, Kramer, Liszt, and Saint-Saëns.

Cecile de Horvath, pianist, will play Scriabine's "Sonata Fantasy" and the B minor sonata of Chopin at the Princess Theatre today, with transcriptions of famous airs by Sgambati, Tausig, Brahms, Saint-Saëns, and Liszt.

Vera Amazar, soprano, at the Garrick this afternoon, has a program of airs by Italian, French, and Russian composers, ending with unfamiliar folksongs of Russia.

Galli-Curci opens her third season here, save for a recent Metropolitan benefit, with a concert at the Hippodrome tonight, when she will sing an air from "Sonnambula," Bishop's "Gentle Lark," Valverde's "Clavelitos" in Spanish, others French and American, and the Mad Scene from "Hamlet."

John O'Sullivan, tenor, heard with the Chicago Opera, will give his first concert at Carnegie Hall tonight, singing airs from Méhul's "Joseph," from "L'Africaine," "Le Roi d'Ys," and "Pagliacci," Irish songs by Augusta Holmes, Herbert, and traditional Celtic tunes.

Germaine Schnitzer, pianist, at Aeolian Hall tomorrow afternoon, will play Beethoven's C minor variations, Schumann's F sharp minor sonata, Liszt's "Benediction in Solitude," and pieces by Chopin and MacDowell.

The New York Chamber Music Society opens a fifth season on Monday evening at Aeolian Hall with Beethoven's quintet, Opus 16, Mozart's "Divertimento" in D, five "Impressions of a Holiday" by Goosens, and a chamber symphony by Juon.

Edwin Hughes, pianist, at Aeolian Hall on Tuesday afternoon, will play Beethoven's sonata, Opus 31, No. 3; some variations by Grieg, pieces by Chopin, and two novelties by Fannie Dillon of California.

Helen Stanley, soprano, on Tuesday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, will sing airs of Sarti, Mendelssohn, Goldmark, a "Triptyque" of Georges Hue, and songs by Ferrari, the Misses Bauer and Levin, and Beryl Rubinstein.

The Beethoven Association's remarkable program on Tuesday night at Aeolian Hall includes a trio, Opus 96, for Messrs. Bauer, Thibaud, and Willeke, that with Louis Svecenski, the quartet in E flat; also the violin "Romance" for Thibaud, and the airs, "My Heart is Sore" and "Adelaide," sung by John McCormack.

Ruth Rhy, formerly of Chicago and for two years at Petrograd, will make a debut as violinist at Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, playing a Tartini sonata, Lalo's "Symphonie Espagñole," and pieces by Grasse, Debussy, Sarasate, and Auer.

Dora Howell, soprano, an Aeolian debutante on Wednesday afternoon, will sing airs of Mozart, Scarlatti, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Grieg, Grondahl, Saint-Saëns, Weckerlin, Trecharne, Marum, Woodman, and La Forge.

The New Symphony Orchestra's third pair of concerts, on Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, will present Schubert's symphony in C, Ernest Bloch's "Hiver-Printemps," and David Stanley Smith's "Prince Hal," under the direction of Artur Bodanzky.

The New York Symphony Orchestra, under Walter Damrosch, will open its local season on Thursday afternoon in Carnegie Hall, presenting Brahms's First symphony, Mendelssohn's violin concerto, with Albert Spalding, and Wagner's prelude and finale from "Tristan."

Francis Rogers, who sang for the A. E. F. in France, returns to Aeolian Hall on Thursday afternoon in baritone airs of Handel, Chausson, Massenet, Carpenter, Engel, Rummel, and Huhn, the texts including Tagore, Amy Lowell, and Moira O'Neill.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Pierre Monteux, will open its visits here on Thursday evening at Carnegie Hall with Schumann's "Spring" symphony, Beethoven's only ballet, "Creatures of Prometheus," Debussy's "Faun," and a suite by the Rumanian composer, Enesco.

Harold Henry, after army service, will appear as pianist at Aeolian Hall on Friday afternoon, playing Liszt's "Dante" sonata, Franck's prelude, chorale, and fugue, Skilton's "Sioux Flute Serenade," and his own "Dancing Marionette."

Maurice Dambois, 'cellist, on Friday evening at Aeolian Hall, will play Boellman's variations, Haydn's concerto in D, pieces by Bruch, Kreisler, Debussy, and his own "Caprice Russe" by request. Mr. Dambois played here last week for the Queen of the Belgians.

Walter Damrosch's symphony concerts for children start a third year at Aeolian Hall next Saturday morning with music of Saint-Saëns, Beethoven, Berlioz, and the overtures to "Oberon" and "William Tell."

Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony men on Saturday in Carnegie Hall will perform Haydn's "Queen of France" symphony, Beethoven's "King Stephen" overture, Franck's "Wild Huntsman," and Stravinsky's "Fire Bird."

Dorothy Berliner, pianist, on Saturday afternoon in Aeolian Hall will play Beethoven's C minor variations, Chopin's B minor sonata, and pieces by five Spanish composers.

George Baklanoff, baritone, following a tour with the Chicago Opera, is announced in song recital on Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall.

May Peterson, Samuel Ljungkvist and the Tollefsen Trio will appear at the St. Erik Society's concert on Saturday evening in Carnegie Hall.

Next Sunday's events include the Symphony Society at Aeolian Hall, the Friends of Music at the Ritz-Carlton, three American artists at the Manhattan, Sophie Braslau at Carnegie, Greta Torpadie at the Princess, and John McCormack at the Hippodrome.

PLANS OF MUSICIANS.

The New York Philharmonic, with Percy Grainger as soloist, will play tomorrow in Joseph Fuerstman's series of concerts at the First Regiment Armory in Newark.

Mme. Galli-Curci will be heard this week, with James Stanley, bass, and Winston Wilkinson, violin, at the first of the Biltmore Friday morning musicales.

Thomas Egan, tenor, will present scenes from opera at the Waldorf-Astoria on Friday evening, under the auspices of the Knights of Columbus.

Amy Grant's annual course of readings of operatic texts to music will be held on ten Tuesday afternoons and as many Tuesday evenings at the Hotel Plaza.

Chicago Stars End Tour.

Herbert M. Johnson, Controller of the Chicago Opera Association, has informed the New York office of that company that the Fall tour of Campanini's stars, now drawing to a close, has passed all its previous records, thanks to the prosperity of the West and to the impression created by Rosa Raisa in "Aida," with Alessandro Dolci and others heard here last season. Emmy Destinn, Alessandro Bonci, and Georges Baklanoff appeared in Verdi's "Masked Ball," while Tamaki Miura, the Japanese prima donna, had everywhere a house sold out for "Madame Butterfly." In brief, a "triumphal progress" closes at Little Rock, Ark., tomorrow night, after which the company returns to prepare for the opening of its season on Tuesday, Nov. 18, in Chicago.

"It remained for the Aeolian Company to produce a Phonograph that is a true Musical Instrument"

The Aeolian Vocalion

The Only Phonograph with an Artistic and Satisfactory Tone Control—

The GRADUOLA

"By USING the Graduola, the interpretation, though remaining the same, in tempo and phrasing, may be varied in tone color, thus giving it a freshness and spontaneity which the ordinary phonograph performance never possesses."

THE feature or device which makes the Aeolian-Vocalion a true musical instrument and which was largely responsible for The Aeolian Company's finally entering the field of phonograph manufacture, was the Graduola, the first simple and practical method of phonograph tone control.

How greatly such a method was needed, how eagerly it has been sought, is evidenced by the numerous attempts to accomplish its results by means of shutters, doors, mufflers, etc., and the inumerable applications on file in the patent office. But the Graduola, the original invention of an obscure musician in Australia, which was purchased and perfected by The Aeolian Company, is not only the sole tone-control of musical value, but a control ideally perfect for its purpose.

Playing the Phonograph

PEOPLE are so accustomed to hearing the phonograph simply play itself, that it is not always easy to picture someone playing it. And it is practically impossible to realize the fascination of doing so without actual experience.

Yet the immense advantage the Graduola gives to the Aeolian-Vocalion is obvious.

Artists never play or sing twice with exactly the same feeling. Without changing their individual conceptions of their songs and compositions, they vary their interpretations in detail.

This is exactly what anyone can do by using the Graduola. Without actually changing the interpretations (tempo and phrasing always remaining the same) it can be varied in tone color, thus giving it a freshness and spontaneity which the ordinary phonograph performance never possesses.

And it is the fact that even when the player knows nothing of music, these changes sound well and add to the musical result, the explanation being that the arbitrary elements of intrepretation, namely: — tempo, phrasing, and basic expression are unaffected by the Graduola.

The Sum Total of Phonograph Satisfaction

Though the Aeolian-Vocalion has been upon the market only about three years, it is today recognized as the leading instrument of its type, not only in this country but also abroad.

This is because the Vocalion offers everything possessed by the best phonographs of ordinary type, and adds its own exclusive and important advantages as well.

For example: — You may search the market over and you will hear no phonograph with so rich, mellow and beautiful a tone; you will see no phonograph that reflects such genuine art in the simple elegance of its cases; and you will find no phonograph that allows you the great privilege of taking an active part in the playing of its records.

You are invited to Aeolian Hall

The Aeolian Company wants everyone interested in phonographs or music to come to Aeolian Hall. You may hear the Vocalion play, for like other phonographs, it plays itself when desired. And then, if you wish, you may take the Graduola in your hands and possibly for the first time in your life, experience the fascination and thrill of expressing your own music instincts in beautiful musical tones.

Aeolian-Vocalion Prices

AEOLIAN-VOCALIONS
without Graduola are priced from $60
Equipped with Graduola from $165

PERIOD MODELS
with Graduola from $280

THESE prices are slightly higher than those of other phonographs. Superior quality in every line necessitates and commands the highest price. Considering how much more it costs to secure the best in such articles as pianos, automobiles, etc., the very small additional cost of an Aeolian-Vocalion is, for those who desire quality above all things, of no consideration.

Aeolian-Vocalions are sold on a very moderate monthly basis.

NOTES ON CURRENT ART

ELIE NADELMAN'S sculpture and drawings, with drawings by Boardman Robinson, are at the Knoedler Galleries. We have in this country no more cheerful commentator on the amusement side of life than Mr. Nadelman. No one sees more clearly that amusement fails to amuse or makes more conspicuous its poverty. Occasionally an acrobat or a musician is working hard enough to be really entertaining, but as a rule Mr. Nadelman tells you about how professional entertainers have sought out the cheap and easy way of making you think you are having a good time. That is the only trouble with his art, it teaches such profound lessons and with such skill that you cannot escape learning them. When you should be thinking only about the marvelous egg-like smoothness of his surfaces and contours, about the uninterrupted flow of his descriptive line, about the science of construction that makes the too solid flesh of his robust subjects stand firmly upon their infinitesimal feet, about his mastery of gesture and power to tell you all about a physiognomy without mentioning a single feature—when you should be paying attention to all these and other technical felicities you are wondering instead how long such types can stand the pressure of civilization, and how pleased historians are going to be when they find the social feebleness of the twentieth century abundantly illustrated in sculpture of this unmistakable quality, and how any one dare be a host or hostess or wear evening dress when Mr. Nadelman may happen to them at any moment. He says such serious, such positively portentous things that he cannot, of course, say them very seriously. It would be much too dangerous.

Mr. Robinson, on the other hand, goes back to subjects that afford refuge for minds oppressed by the catastrophes of recent years. He draws The Temptation, The Expulsion, Samson and Delilah, The Hands of Moses, Judith, The Prodigal Son, and one feels in his drawings the mood of the present, the new wine that is not yet rich enough for ancient bottles. He is best in his "Evening Prayer," (Russia, 1915,) and in his cynical little comment on the Zuloaga exhibition and the people who went to see it. These show two sides of his work and represent the responsiveness of his mind to reality. The exhibitions last only through this week.

Exhibition of the Society of American Painters, Sculptors, and Gravers.

The Gimpel & Wildenstein Galleries corroborate the denial of the Society of American Painters, Sculptors, and Gravers that it means anything revolutionary or violent. It is a truly sedate exhibit, containing a considerable number of beautiful things and a comparatively small number of things that are poor and negligible.

The rear room has an air of stability, a salon carré aspect, that is very consoling to the serious-minded. Many of the exhibits are not new to the New York public, or else so much resemble works that have been shown elsewhere as to give the impression af familiarity.

George Bellows flanks J. Alden Weir's "Nocturne" and "Head" on either side, and the combination is not what one would expect. The portrait of his mother by Mr. Bellows is one that will hold its own in any company and one on which he safely might base his reputation. John Sloan's red-haired boy in the crotch of a tree has a background of the true Sloan red, and the blue tree makes a handsome decoration. The adjacent nude by the same artist is rich in modeling and in warm human feeling, a fine and sound piece of painting. George Luks shows a brown portrait that is one of his triumphs of characterization, but not very interesting in color. Eugene Speicher in his "Landscape" seems to have gone to the fashionable Renoir source for his inspiration, but he has made a personal matter of it and has conquered influence. Other pictures in the room are a strong still life by Samuel Halpert and a rather feeble figure study by William Glackens, characteristic landscapes by Ernest Dawson, a thoughtful portrait by Albert Sterner, landscapes by Van Perrine, Gifford Beal, Hayley Lever, and others, one of Mr. Melchers's picturesque Scottish figures, a harbor scene by Jonas Lie, a very fine marine by Paul Dougherty, and Leon Kroll's picnic picture.

In the front room a livelier iris and more of a young man's fancy play about the occasion. Randall Davey is particularly lively with his "Hopi Snake Dance," which would make exactly the right theatre set for the still unwritten American drama. The artist hasn't overburdened his subject with illustrative detail, but he seems to have been true to its traditions. The rhythms of the dancers and the wriggles of the snakes, together with a beautiful curve of shore and well-planned curves of color, are combined in an interesting informal composition. The palette is blonde and suits the warm pale yellow and sharp greens of the landscape.

Fifteen by Fifteen.

The usual numerical arrangement in favor with the Macbeth Galleries results this week in fifteen paintings by fifteen artists, some of them of supreme charm. Maria Oakey Dewing's "A Bed of Poppies" is the kind of flower painting that makes one first wonder why every artist does not turn to flower painting, and then how any artist can have the temerity to embark upon an adventure so delicate and hazardous. Mrs. Dewing's poppies are not only as exquisite in color and as diaphanous in texture and as graceful in poise as the flowers in nature are, but they are as lovely as an artist's impression of the loveliness.

The exhibition contains striking contrasts. Mr. Dewing's "The Mirror," with its aristocracy of vision, its austere spacing, and its slim muscular forms, is there with Mr. Frieseke's little powdery white girl in pink whose personality has in it a hint of Pierrot and who is painted with an appropriate note of artificiality. Paul Dougherty's extremely athletic "Summer Morning" shakes a rocky at Charles Warren Eaton's "Evening Quiet" and Childe Hassam's Autumn scene at Old Lyme comes pacifically between them, a picture to give any one pause in the day's occupations.

The place of honor is given to the "Girl in White" by William M. Chase, one of his pictures that tells us how truly he was an artist and how much his style was his own in spite of the homage he constantly paid to others.

Bookbindings at the Grolier Club.

One of the most important exhibitions for the purpose of fixing standards of modern craftsmanship is that of bookbindings at the Grolier Club, in which the best work of the nineteenth century is shown. The French section is the largest, with impeccable forwarding and finishing, and the widest possible range of taste from the conservatism of the Empire to the riot of the Reboubile. The history of a time may be read in all or any of its arts, and the archaeological spirit of the early years of the century is reflected in the bindings of this period. Toward the middle of the century, we come upon Trauts, and the famous mosaic bindings, each of which has been carefully listed, and its history recorded. Every one existing in America is included in the exhibition. Among the more modern men are Cape, Chambolle, Cuzin, Marius-Michel, and Mercier.

The English section includes the work of followers of Roger Payne, the varieties of styles used by Bedford, and the early work of Cobden Sanderson.

The exhibition is open to the public from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M., and on Thursday and Saturday evenings until 10 o'clock. It will continue until Nov. 22.

Water Colors and Pastels.

The galleries of the Fine Arts Building are full of water colors and pastels and oil colors, and there is no end of their treasures. The pictures are so close together that they make an almost solid band around the wall under the green festoons of leaves, and the decorative effect is rather charming. But as for seeing the pictures, you must do it en bloc—there is no detaching each from its neighbor.

Taking it that way, it is a very pleasant little exhibition, or pair of exhibitions. The water colors in the exhibition of the New York Water Color Club are unusually subdued. Not one snaps out an individual passage from the low-toned, decorous general quietness. It is all very well bred. A Winslow Homer suddenly introduced would cause a panic on the walls.

In the outer gallery is the third annual exhibition of the New York Society of Painters. The society is divided into two equal groups of men and women, twenty-five each, and after their work is shown in New York it goes on tour. Jonas Lie's "Driftwood" is one of the good things shown. Perhaps the most interesting is Lester D. Boronda's "Brocaded Bodice," a very distinguished half-length figure, the bodice that plays the title rôle showing an adroit weaving of beautiful color, the sharper notes of which are repeated in the flowers in the hair. The flesh tones are sensitively harmonized with the general tone of the bodice, and each part of the picture is submerged in the effect of the whole. In itself it makes a visit to the gallery quite worth while.

New Q·R·S
PLAYER ROLLS

If you don't own a player piano, you are denying yourself the most wholesome enjoyment in the world.
NOVEMBER
now ready at your music dealer's
The "master pattern" from which one of the numbers in the November issue of Q·R·S Player Rolls was made cost several thousand dollars.
Yet the price of this Q·R·S Roll is only a few pennies over what you would expect to pay for just an ordinary roll.
Q·R·S production is so large that the initial cost of a roll is absorbed by the great volume and amounts to almost nothing on the single roll you purchase.
Go and hear the new Q·R·S numbers at your music dealer's. Almost every music dealer believes in quality music rolls—that's why they recommend and sell Q·R·S Music Rolls.

Toy Town at Bamberger's, Newark

TIME, that flies so swiftly for grown-ups, worries along on leaden wings for children, and yet Time, with all this blend of swiftness and tardiness, has swung again into the Holiday season.

Christmas is coming again. Christmas, most glorious day of all the year to the crystal-pure mind of childhood; when a wonderful Santa Claus with a heart of gold waits eagerly to gratify the heart's desire, whether it be a velocipede or a string of beads—a doll that talks or a shapeless little rag baby meant solely for cuddling. All over the world are little faces turned toward the North, where Santa dwells—and little hands reaching out toward a big, round-tummied individual with a rosy smile and a magic pack that contains—everything.

The children do not anticipate alone. We, too, anticipate—have anticipated—and to the end that no child shall be disappointed; that every parent shall have ample time to pick from Santa's wares while they are fresh, unhandled and plentiful, we—Bamberger's—bought toys, thousands of toys, extra early, and shall present them to you at once.

Toy Town is now open. Bring the children before the great holiday rush sets in.

BETTER CLOTHES AND MORE MONEY SAVING

Government-Aided Campaign to Teach Women What to Buy and What to Wear in Spite of Complications Created by a Designing Garment Trade

BY way of the avenue of women's dress there is to be conducted in this country before very long an educational campaign on the popular but discouraging subject of saving money. In other words our Government has taken the first steps in the direction of teaching the women in the country at large the vital principles concerned in the production of their clothes. Never was a more sensible idea put forth nor one that had the possibilities of bearing such a healthy crop of fruit: Women want to know—or they ought to want to know—the insides of the business that supplies them with the wherewithal for their dressing. They want to know why certain things are good and why others are bad. They want to know the basic points of good style and the elements that will make their clothes, when they are good, last on from season to season with no undue attention paid to the details of changing lengths of skirts, fittings of sleeves, fullnesses of blouses, and so on. But this information, slight and inconsequential as it may seem, is not at all easy to get. And consequently the women in America are usually the victims of those who plan and scheme only to get their money. The ways of accomplishing this end are devious and difficult of comprehension even to the initiated.

Thus something like a liberal education is involved and unless the needed knowledge is disseminated by somebody as pervasive as the Government there can be no wide and general conception of the matter. This is what, it seems, the American women are about to acquire through the medium of lectures at their clubs, and propaganda of one sort and another.

Aided by [illegible]s' League.

The National [illegible]mers' League is the organization which is preparing to assist the Government in this undertaking, and they are about to discuss in a general meeting at Maysville, Ky., the ways and means of handling the question through legislation. This side of the subject, of course, will take care of the distribution of cloth and of the proper marking of such goods as "shoddy" or "pure wool" as the case may be. The point is that much material is being put upon the market just at present which is quite inferior in quality and that there is no way for the inexperienced purchaser to know what she is buying.

This condition seriously handicaps her judgment and ability for selection because unless she has been educated in the tests of wool or half wool material she has no method of protecting herself. Her wishes may be definite enough. She may believe that it is right that she should have all wool at any price, but how is she to know? The National Consumers' League wants to have fabrics plainly marked as to the grade or quality just as pure and adulterated foods are marked.

Another and very real objection to employing "shoddy" in the making of women's garments is the fact that dubiously sanitary methods are sometimes used in the manufacture of the stuff. The Consumers' League considers this material unhygienic, and it would have the public know the whys and wherefores of the whole business so that it may proceed as intelligently on the subject as on some others which have already had the benefit of investigation and exposure.

The Department of Justice has also taken up the investigation of this high cost of clothes problem, and announces a plan to do away as much as possible with the overabundance of middlemen employed in the distribution of the products of the garment industry. Special attention will be given here to the question of men's clothing, which, it seems, is in an equally deplorable state. The idea is to eliminate to a large extent the changes in men's styles, which, it is asserted, are entirely futile and based only upon the idea of selling more stock than would be possible if the fashions were to remain more nearly the same from season to season.

A New Plaid Duvetyn Suit.

Woman on Her Own.

Now there is a good deal that women can do for themselves in this direction of understanding the fashion problem as directly related to the high cost of living. They should not under any circumstances become the victims of a condition which, though it undoubtedly exists, need not in any sense prove their undoing. It is high time for American women to take a stand and to decide what their clothes will be and how they will have them made. Let them demand smartness and style and frequent changes if they will, but let them insist upon having some art and some good sense used in the manufacture. For a long enough time they have bought what was offered and silently consented to wear what they were told was the right thing to wear. But if a new day has dawned for women in every other walk of life, why hasn't it appeared on the horizon? It is now obscured by the modist and manufacturer's business methods, and a few wise ones are beginning to see it slowly advancing over the far mountain top.

A woman whose time is so occupied that she knows little or nothing about the prevailing styles, goes into a shop to buy a new gown. Unless it is a very high-class and extremely reliable shop she may come forth with almost anything. It looks pretty and she takes the word of the saleswoman that it is the proper wear. Then, after a month or two have passed away, she begins to see that the gown is not all her fancy painted it. She weighs the cost, she consults her neighbor who, before making her own season's purchase, had gone into the subject a little more thoroughly, and she must needs open her eyes to the fact that she has been, to use a polite expression, "stung."

It is all very discouraging, but if she is going to do better next time, if she is going to distribute her own or her husband's money with any more discretion, she must know more surely just what she is doing. It is not exactly easy to know, perhaps, but there are a few simple rules the observance of which will help her greatly, and in the end she will thank her stars that she has put her mind to the thing. For she will find that she no longer has that hopeless country cousin feeling after her gown is a month or two older.

A Blouse of Irish Linen and Irish Crochet.

Question of Material.

There is the matter of material—that naturally heads the list. It must be conservative in color, faultless in weave, and fine in quality. As for the cut—avoid extremes. We hear so much about radical changes, yet a swift survey of the many seasons past shows us that the flagrantly different things do not take hold and last. The middle way, when it is well done, is the safest path to follow. Avoid eccentricities of trimming and embellishment. But study the line with care. And your reward will be the feeling of well-being in whatever you choose to wear as a result of this self-imposed education.

There is no reason why a woman's dress should ever become monotonous or stick to one dull pattern like the clothes of men so long as she gives her own mind to the study of her individual problem. But when she allows herself to be used as a mere mannequin built to show off clothes that are made simply to sell, then she need not be surprised at any bizarre outcome.

For the Winter season a woman is always safe when she orders a suit, for during this part of the year most of all of her daytime activities lend themselves most comfortably to this type of garment. And, once she has that suit of exactly the right sort in her possession, she can draw a long breath and cease trouble over what she is going to wear. The suit, especially this season, should be as simple and as plain as possible, for it should use as little material as consistent with good dressing, and at the same time it should be so pure in line and in style that it will be fit to be carried over into another season. If the suit is made of not too heavy material, then during the coldest weather it can be worn with one of the new and interesting duvetyn waistcoats—this to give extra warmth from underneath and with furs on the outside, which not only add warmth to the street costume but also add a richness and a hint of coziness which go so far toward the psychological feeling of warmth.

Smocks, which a season or two ago, were quite insurgent and unusual, have now become almost the common thing to wear. They have been done to such an extent that now the very smartest suits are finished with blouses that are snugly tucked in at the waistline in the good and practical old-fashioned way. The most elegant of these are made of hand-worked linens and laces. Perhaps the reason for this revival is the fact that a few importations are coming from Europe, which is the home of the hand-made blouse.

From there it comes in all of its perfection. In the illustration on this page is shown a blouse of fine handkerchief linen, plainly made and put together with the finest of hand stitches. Then the collar is made of a rolling strip of heavy Irish crochet lace. There is a freshness about a blouse of this sort which carries with it every feminine charm. And it is an idea, too, in the direction of combating the high cost of living in a very elegant manner. Most people have bits of lace tucked away, waiting to be used on some auspicious occasion. Well, the occasion has arrived on this day, when every effort must be used to crawl around high prices.

The suit in the illustration is made of one of the very newest of soft pile weaves, patterned with a plaid. The tone of the material is a dark taupe, and the plaid line that runs through it is a dark brown, almost a black. The collar and cuffs are made of a darker shade of the soft, woolly goods. Indeed, the color almost matches that in the stripe of the suit material. The hat is made of a band of cock feathers, tightly confined all around the face, and drooping over the right ear is a spray of the same feathers.

The plea of this campaign of good dressing in war time and after is based on the purchase of good materials, for they can be used over and over again and are not consigned to the waste heap after one season has passed away. If one indulges in some of the "shoddy" materials, one sees them fading away before their very eyes, and the crop of wrinkles that a suit of this character can gather would astonish even the most casual observer. We have been used to good materials in this country, because for many years past we have been able to buy them for a little money, and now, when conditions have so materially changed, we are easy marks for the sellers of inferior products. The material looks all right on the shop counter. It has been nicely pressed and carefully rolled. Again, in the ready-made suits and dresses it shows no sign at first glance of being made of anything but the best threads in the world.

It is during the following days and weeks of wear that its true character emerges. Then shame is born in the heart of its wearer, and her next thought is to find a way to buy another suit. The moral of this tale is that if she had made an effort in the beginning to buy the best material available her suit would have had a long and a satisfactory life, and she would have been saved humiliation and worry.

Domestic Oil Skirts.

All sorts of ways and means have been suggested to help the dress problem in little ways. The recent laundry strike brought out an interesting suggestion from Mrs. Julian Heath, President of the Housewives' League. She was concerned with the saving of laundry work only, but her plan centred on the clothes that women must necessarily wear about the house when they are engaged in their domestic work. She maintained that if women were to make their house dresses or their work dresses rather out of white linoleum of a thin and easily handled quality they would have the advantage of being able to be kept clean without going to a laundry. This little plan has advantages that extend beyond the exigencies of the present strike, for household washing has gone up with everything else in the world, and it would be a boon to many women if they could find some way to save an outlay of money in this direction. There is no reason why a dress of the sort suggested, if it is well planned and made, should not be very presentable looking, and certainly for all the heavy household duties it has a clear utility.

Mrs. Heath said on this subject: "I must say that the idea of a linoleum house dress or woman's overall appeals to me. It could be wiped off just like a kitchen table and hung up for the next time. There would be a real place for linoleum and aprons and slip-ons, too, for lighter work, and even for dust caps."

So a variety of plans are being put forward in this drive to rid women of some of the burden of expenditure on their clothes. Each woman can do her part by putting her mind to her own problem and determining to find a way out for herself. She may stumble upon something which will be of benefit to the whole world of women at this critical time.

OPERA SEASON SOON TO OPEN

"TOSCA" is announced to open the Metropolitan Opera season two weeks from tomorrow evening. Three of the company's most popular artists will take part in the performance—Miss Farrar, who has just returned from a concert tour; Mr. Caruso, who is due to arrive this week from his season in Mexico, and Mr. Scotti, who returns today from a four weeks' tour with his own company. In the opening week here, Caruso will also be heard with Miss Ponselle in a revival of Halevy's "La Juive."

Within the last few days Pascale Amato, whose health prevented his singing with the company last season, arrived from Italy in optimistic mood. With him was Giovanni Martinelli, who, during the Summer, was leading tenor at Covent Garden. Miss Claudia Muzio has reached New York from Buenos Aires after a season there. Giuseppe de Luca was in France waiting for a steamer to bring him over. Rumors of his illness were said to be exaggerated; he had an attack of sciatica, from which he has fully recovered. Mme. Gabriella Bezanzoni, the new Italian contralto, has been singing with Caruso in Mexico and will arrive in New York this week. Mme. Alda's concert tour will keep her occupied until the opening of the season.

Mr. Gatti-Casazza has been passing long hours during the evening and late into the night experimenting with the numerous sets of new scenery with which he has enriched the "decorative" side of his productions. He is enthusiastic over the scenery which Boris Anisfeld has painted for "L'Oiseau Bleu," and not less so over the work done by Joseph Urban for "La Juive," "Eugene Onyegin," and "Parsifal"; also by Norman Geddes for Hadley's "Cleopatra's Night," by James Fox for "Zaza," and by Willy Pozany for "The Italian in Algiers."

Brooklyn Opera to Cost More.

The first of the Metropolitan Opera performances in Brooklyn this season will take place Tuesday, Nov. 18, at the Academy of Music. There will be ten opera nights in all, three on Saturday evenings and seven Tuesdays, running to March 6. An appearance of Caruso and of Farrar, along with other stars, is expected, and official mention is made of the largest subscription list in the history of grand opera in Brooklyn. Fully two-thirds of the orchestra has been subscribed.

This may be due to the new prices, according to H. T. Swin of the Brooklyn Academy. Heretofore box office prices were the same as those to subscribers. Now tickets for a single performance are to be dearer. Subscribers may retain their tickets at the old rate of $5, while at the box office window the fee will be $6. Thus the subscribers obtain a pair of tickets for $11, which includes the war tax, while the transient operagoers must pay $13.20 a pair in Brooklyn, as compared with $15.40 on Broadway.

SEVERAL years ago we believed there existed a demand for a good phonograph at a reasonable price and on terms which would bring it within the reach of all. The SILVERTONE was designed and built to meet this demand. By adopting and combining the best features of all the phonographs then on the market, by making such improvements as experience had proved necessary, and by using only the finest materials in its construction, we succeeded in making the SILVERTONE a phonograph of super-quality.

Quantity production, efficient manufacturing methods and our economical mode of selling, enabled us to offer the SILVERTONE at a price far below that of other phonographs of the same size, quality and musical perfection.

The enthusiastic response of our six million customers when we announced the SILVERTONE, proved to us that we had indeed filled a long-felt want. Since then hundreds of thousands of these phonographs have been sold and are giving their owners universal satisfaction and pleasure.

The popularity which the SILVERTONE has enjoyed among our own customers has led us to believe that everybody, everywhere, whether or not they are customers of Sears, Roebuck and Co., will welcome the opportunity to purchase a good phonograph at a reasonable price, and on terms which make it easy for everybody to own one. That is why we are making this liberal offer.

An Offer Open to Everybody, Everywhere
Send No Money—30 Days' Trail

Select any SILVERTONE Phonograph illustrated on this page, fill in the order blank below and mail it to Sears, Roebuck and Co. today. We will send you the phonograph without the payment of one cent in advance. And this does not obligate you in any way. All we want you to do is to try the instrument for thirty days. Examine its mechanical features, cabinet work and finish. Compare its musical excellence with any other phonograph. Give it every test necessary to prove the truth of our claims for it. If at the end of this 30-day trial you are not satisfied with the instrument, if you do not believe that it is the equal of any phonograph on the market, and that the price is lower than any other instrument of the same quality, size and musical perfection, simply notify us and we will take it away at our own expense. This 30-day trial does not cost you one penny, nor does it place you under any obligation to buy.

Plays All Disc Records

The SILVERTONE convertible tone arm permits the playing of any make or size of disc records, including the Columbia, Victor, Edison, OkeH, Emerson, Pathe or any other disc record. And it plays them all with the purity and richness of tone that marks the perfect reproducing instrument.

Easy Payments

If you decide to keep the phonograph after this 30-day trial, send us the price of the phonograph you have selected in equal payments each month until the total is paid. The amount of the monthly payment on each machine is shown under the illustrations of the various models.

Tone

Tone quality depends upon the reproducer, tone arm and amplifying chamber. Each must be correctly designed and proportioned and harmonized in its relation to the other two so that all will act together as a unit. This has been done in the SILVERTONE. The SILVERTONE reproducer faithfully restores every tone quality, every delicate shading of expression, every minute variation of volume and density, every sound vibration.

Tone Control

The SILVERTONE is equipped with a tone modulator which gives complete control of the volume of sound. It serves the same purpose as the doors on the Victrola or the shutters on the Columbia Grafonola.

CONFERENCE FOR FORESTRY

Meeting Next Week Will Discuss Forced Reforestation by Lumbermen

BECAUSE America's forests are disappearing at the rate of 50,000 acres a day in the South alone, Colonel Henry S. Graves, chief of the United States Forest Service, plans to come to Syracuse, N. Y., on Nov. 11 for a conference which includes representatives of the Society for the Protection of the Adirondacks, the Retail Lumber Dealers' Association of the State, the Empire State Forest Products Association, the Northern New York Development League, (which proposes to establish a chain of municipal forests,) the American Paper and Pulp Association, the Society of Professional Foresters, the State Conservation Commission, the Fish and Game Leagues, and the Anglers' Association.

This conference will probably determine what recommendations will be made to Washington for the future forest policy of the nation, and it will bring together on common ground the lumberman who cuts the trees and the forester who tries to save and grow them. Upon one point of Colonel Graves's plan—the proposal to make reforestation of cut-over areas mandatory upon the lumberman, even the foresters of New York State are in opposition. For in New York and in New England the forestry profession is strongly opposed to this expedient. Their attitude is that forestry must be attractive to the business man and economically sound if it is to be recognized as more than a scientific fad. In the old days the lumberman looked upon the forester as a destructive insect, whose ambition was to wreck business. Now the practical foresters have in the East arrayed in behalf of the vanishing lumber industry. Whether they will succeed in convincing Colonel Graves is one of the questions which the conference will determine.

In any case, the entire lumber and paper industry regards the Syracuse meeting as of great importance. That it is more than a State conference is shown by the fact that it will be held during the week of the convention in New York of the American Paper and Pulp Association, the date having been changed to permit an attendance of this big national association of pulp wood users.

Colonel Graves will be the first speaker, and Conservation Commissioner George D. Pratt of Albany will be the presiding officer. He will probably figure in the discussion, also, in pleading for the protection of the Adirondacks forest against the ravages of industry, and for the protection of the great forest for a playground for the State. After Colonel Graves outlines his policy, Dr. Hugh P. Baker, dean of the New York State College of Forestry at Syracuse, will state the foresters' position. After Dr. Baker, the lumbermen present their spokesman, Frank L. Moore of Watertown) N. Y., head of the Newton Falls Paper Company, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Empire State Forest Products Association, and former President of the American Paper and Pulp Association, and Chairman of its Forestry Committee.

After these two speakers, the conference will be thrown open for a rapid fire quizzing of Colonel Graves on details of his policy. According to foresters and lumbermen alike, the trouble is that the growing of a forest is a long time investment, such as no individual will ever attempt, and the lumberman cannot be forced to stand the cost of planting trees which he will never see come to maturity.

DEMOCRACY OR SOVIETISM, BAY STATE VOTERS' CHOICE

Issue Flatly Joined for First Time in Massachusetts Fight for Governorship, With Coolidge Backed by Republicans and Democrats, Matched Against Champion of Police Strikers

By RANDOLPH WALLFORD SMITH, Author of "Ideals of Government" and Other Books.

THE most vitally important and significantly momentous Gubernatorial contest in the annals of American politics is to be decided in the historic old Commonwealth of Massachusetts this week. Few Presidential elections have foreshadowed the dire possibilities of more dangerous pitfalls or graver menace.

Innumerable letters and communications to the newspapers throughout the State and to citizens in every walk of life would seem to indicate that the eyes of the whole nation are focused on the Bay State and the all-important result of the election.

Indications are plain that the decision may be accepted by the people of the country as a whole as the primary test of the new Americanism—the Americanism which has had its birth since the armistice was signed and which so radically differs from the war spirit of the American people, that left little to be desired in point of patriotism and earnest effort. Party lines, as the contest draws to a close, have been literally shot to pieces, due mainly to the fact perhaps that the President of the United States and the only living ex-President have frankly and openly arrayed themselves on the side of Calvin Coolidge, the Republican incumbent of the office. With his party solidly behind him, usually a large majority party in all Presidential and State contests, and the inferential indorsement of President Wilson, Coolidge would seem to be in an unassailable position. The reverse is true, however, and many of the wiseacres of his own party are in dread fear of his defeat. And thereby hangs what promises to be one of the most dramatic chapters in the history of political contests in this or any other land.

Boston, it will be recalled, is one hundred and forty miles nearer the other side than any other port of entry. Massachusetts, because of its vast commercial and industrial activities, has been for many years an inviting stamping ground for the numerous hordes of Continental Europe. For a long period it has had dumped on its shores heterogeneous throngs of every known nationality—and judging by the weird visages one sees in the numerous slum quarters some that are not so well known. The educational facilities of the cities and States have not kept apace, and a confusion of races and a confounding of creeds and vices have been the only too natural result. And in the motley mobs it has been impossible for the secret officers of the Government or the State to detect the most dangerous culprits. Bolshevist schools have cropped up in many quarters. Syndicalists are numerous. The most dangerous form of socialism is a mania with a numerous population of the State.

And the Soviet, more dangerous and recently more numerous than all the others, has stalked boldly about. The great parkway known as the Common, and the beautiful Public Gardens, adjoining that centre, like some superb jewel in the very heart of the city, are the rendezvous of hundreds of these human menaces day by day.

Secret Service officials and Department of Justice officers for many months past have viewed with increasing alarm the constant activities of the several alien bodies. Despite the espionage and surveillance laws, the restrictions, State and municipal, and the postal regulations, the Bolsheviki and Soviet cataloguers and pamphleteers continued to ply their trade. Amid the mobs of an alien populace detection was well-nigh impossible.

The Police Strike.

Six months ago, almost to a day, the Soviet movement, it was determined by the powers behind the order in this country, had sufficiently advanced to begin action. Insidiously and with infinite subtlety affiliation was made with certain of the labor organizations. When that work was complete, it was decided to follow out the first usual course—the course pursued in Russia and elsewhere—and overthrow the police.

Four cities were selected in the United States at the four points of compass—north, New York; east, Boston; south, Macon, Ga., and west, Chicago. How signally all of these efforts but one, distinctly and emphatically Soviet in the background, failed is now a lamentable page on the scroll of American records.

In Boston, however, the city of traditional pride and resources, a veritable American stronghold, the police strike and first public Soviet movement in this country cannot as yet be counted a failure. There had been rumblings of a strike, threats day by day for many months, but none of them was taken seriously.

It was not thought possible that officers of the law bound by the most solemn oath to protect an American city, to defend the sleeping women and children of a great metropolitan centre, would lay down their arms and leave the whole sleeping populace at the mercy of the mob. The so-called guardians did that very thing, however, and the whole action and the contemporaneous activities of various striking unions were as Soviet as the most Soviet of recent Russian happenings.

Women were stripped to nudity in the public thoroughfares. The handsomest shops along the principal streets were wrecked. There was, fortunately, only minor bloodshed, for the principal reason that there was no strong drink to be had without infinite trouble and very high payment. The city officials, utterly unable to deal with the situation, appealed to the Governor, who, with remarkable celerity had the city under the protection of the State Guard.

It is upon this issue of the police strike that the campaign is being fought out. Other political subject matter has been entered in the lists, but all else but the strike has dwindled into infinitesimal insignificance. The platforms adopted by the two parties at their respective conventions were curiously contradictory. The platform of the Democrats declined to indorse the League of Nations and condoned the striking policemen in such fashion that a cry of indignation went up from the entire nation.

Many of the important journals throughout the country condemned the un-American spirit expressed in the platform. At the Republican convention former United States Senator William Murray Crane, who for many years has directed the fortunes of the Republican Party in Massachusetts, insisted upon a plank indorsing the League of Nations Treaty without amendment despite the somewhat violent insistence of Senator Lodge to the contrary.

The convention of course obeyed his dictation. Lodge's attitude for many months past has excited widespread comment. He has openly arraigned himself with the Democratic Senator, Walsh, after a fashion that has caused the old line Republicans to gasp with amazement. The League, contradictory planks, oddly assorted bed-fellows, &c., are, however, likely to count for but little. The various candidates—the heckling and the being heckled—are racing around the State voicing the usual platitudinous political patter, except Governor Coolidge, who is quietly going about his duties and strenuously avoiding the general mêlée.

A troubled, weighted-down leader, however, is Senator Crane, unless the writer mightily misses his guess. On every side he encounters the most heetic and fetid brand of optimism that was ever bred into the Bay State Republican ritual. Some of his archaic followers are wearing buttons "Coolidge by 50,000." If you hail them and make some pleasant remark relatively they will smile gleefully, and say, "Oh, that button is a joke. Coolidge will win by over 100,000."

"If Governor Coolidge is defeated we will never be able to elect another Governor in any State in the Union to stand up," Senator Crane told me.

That is the only comment that he made to me during several lengthy interviews that I am going to quote. Why? you ask. Because it is the keynote to the whole situation.

Of National Import.

The stage is not Massachusetts; it is the whole United States. The dramatis personæ are not the voters of the Bay State; the people of this national theatre include the whole American people. It is not an everyday contest for Governor. It is a battle with law and order and government on one side and mob rule with all its filthy fangs of corruption on the other. It is the first gun in a war between the spirit of true Americanism and that heinous thing Sovietism, the most spectacular and fantastic ogre that ever arose out of the darkness like a phantom ship on a spectral sea to again wreck the peace of the world.

The two candidates stand out in bold contrast. The Republican, Calvin Coolidge, is a scion of the old Massachusetts family. He has had a long and somewhat useful career in several minor political positions until he was finally elected President of the Massachusetts Senate, a position which he held for a term of years very acceptably, although much of the legislation which he favored has failed to meet public approval. He is a man of sterling integrity, however, and courage, as was most profoundly illustrated in the police strike. Threats, imprecations and every known form of suasion have failed to move him. He has positively declined to take back the striking policemen before or after election.

At one time the city was threatened with a general strike, and he was informed that terrible things would happen to the capital under his care unless he reversed his position.

Nothing moved him, and his courageous action has won for him a host of Democratic admirers and followers. It is evident that upon the defection of a large element of the Democratic Party throughout the State former Senator Crane must base his hope of victory.

Democrats Desert Party.

Many Democratic leaders all over the State have announced their intention of voting for Coolidge, among them Winslow Warren, formerly Collector of the Port of Boston under President Cleveland and a leader in his own party salons. Mr. Warren voiced the sentiments of many Democrats in the following signed statement:

"The action of an individual voter may be of little importance and his influence may be nil, but the coming election in Massachusetts seems to me to involve a question far above party politics—whether the supremacy of law and order shall be upheld in this Commonwealth and a public servant who has manfully and courageously done his duty shall be sustained by the people.

"I have never been a Republican in politics and see nothing now attractive in the attitude of the Republican Party.

"The Massachusetts Republicans in their recent convention, in my view, shilly-shallied and played double in their action upon national questions, but in the matter of sustaining the Governor in his attitude in maintaining law and order they were direct and emphatic and deserving of credit. I therefore intend to support Governor Coolidge upon that ground alone, for it is of more importance to Massachusetts than any other question involved in this political campaign.

"The Democratic Party here had a grand opportunity—if they had planted themselves squarely upon the side of law and order, heartily supported the greatest Democratic President since Jefferson, and indorsed his great work upon the League of Nations and the Treaty of Versailles, they would have attracted a large body of voters not usually with them and have deserved and probably gained success—but so far from seizing their opportunity, with not uncommon fatuity, they threw it away, evaded the question of law and order, deserted their own President, condemned his great work, and apparently set the interests of a foreign country ahead of the interests of America.

"No loyal supporter of President Wilson and of the League of Nations can support their ticket without violating his own convictions, and at the same time condemning the praiseworthy and straightforward action of the Governor. A Democratic convention that abandons Democratic principles and a Democratic President absolves its members from party allegiance.

"Democrats and Republicans alike should this year make the verdict of Massachusetts perfectly clear upon law and order and leave the politics of 1920 to take care of themselves when the questions then at issue shall be clearly defined.

"WINSLOW WARREN."

Richard H. Long, the Democratic candidate, is a shoe manufacturer of Framingham. He was an exceedingly wealthy man before the war, and it is common knowledge in the State Street financial circles that he made certainly not less than $5,000,000 during the war. Some of the financial experts place his profits at a much larger figure.

If he is permitted to run around loose much he promises to rival Henry Ford in some of his revolutionary tactics, the difference in the two men being that Long is surcharged with remarkable political astuteness and acumen. For weeks past expensive motor cars have been racing through the streets of Boston, Worcester, Springfield with standards two feet high on which are the single word "Long" and perhaps some brief comment to attract the voter. His name is on every tongue and sign post. Many bands of music play its acclaim; Long songs are sung in the marts and market places. Knowing the mob's love for pictures, he is painting them as best he can in lurid and vivid tones.

Immediately after the police strike it was announced that more than one hundred labor unions in and about Boston were going on a sympathetic strike. A wave of alarm swept over the populace not to be soon forgotten when this news was circulated. Boston had just passed through the police strike. It had seen what mob rule meant, as no other American city had ever witnessed such scenes enacted. It had come in contact with the first touch of the Soviet bloodthirst. It had witnessed the horror of denuded women; the wail of children as they raced away from the human brutes and beasts bent upon arson and murder, rape and theft.

Policemen for Long.

Suddenly like the proverbial bolt out of a clear sky, quiet, an ominous quiet, was restored. The labor unions announced that the time was not propitious for a general strike. The angel of peace settled over the whole of Boston and in fact the whole State with marked significance. Close observers began to search around for the curious reversal of form. The striking policemen began to appear in many cities and towns throughout the State as speakers in behalf of the Long candidacy. Most of them had been rehearsed. They sang the song of Long, the friend of the people, with dulcet refrain. They told many stories of the manner in which the thousands of workmen in his employ were treated, the luxuries that came their way, the beautiful homes they had, the magnificent salaries they were awarded, not wages, mark you, vulgar readers.

The gentlemen in the Long factories receive salaries.

If they want a drink of water they do not rise from their chairs and walk to a distant cooler or hydrant. The aqua is served to them by a uniformed attendant just as the chance wayfarers receive it at the Waldorf or the Biltmore.

The factories of the great Long, explained the striking police orators, were model in many ways. They embodied all the lingerie and passementerie of a fashionable hotel or club. And Long was the friend of the workingmen. After election there were to be workingmen's committees; the Long factories—and many other factories, believe us, gentlemen—were to be run as the workingmen's committees in accordance with the Soviet ethics dictated.

Long, the Soviet!

Many began to see the trend of events. Boston and Massachusetts, the home of many "cults and 'isms," with an enormous population of untutored and unlettered voters, was to be the coliseum for the début of the first American Soviet who dared run for office.

Meanwhile, Long himself left no doubt as to the issue upon which he intended to be elected. In The Boston Herald of Oct. 10 he announced that if he were elevated to the Governor's chair he would restore the striking policemen to their positions. There was scant courtesy in his arraignment of Governor Coolidge. There was no excuse for the Governor's attitude, he said, nor the attitude of Mayor Peters and the city officials in the police matter, and the onus was put where, in his judgment, it belonged, on the State and city officials.

The daring of the candidate's declamations rather took the breath out of conservative Boston. There was no subterfuge—no camouflage in his statements. His Sovietism was as frank and open as that of Lenin or Trotzky. He was against the power of government, of law and order of the Coolidge brand, and frankly and openly, heart and soul, with the striking policemen. Boston and the surrounding towns did not have to have that fact rammed down their throats. It was too apparently obvious.

The Long strength began to grow in such conspicuous and unmistakable manner that it could not be mistaken. It was not simple surface indications. The deeper the probe the weaker the Coolidge strength appeared to be. Straw votes were taken in various localities, and they all indicated startling Long strength, not only in Boston, which is something of a Democratic stronghold, but all over the State.

Former Senator Crane was enjoying the Autumn at his home in the Berkshires. He had a little collection of "Coolidge by 50,000" buttons, some rosy reports from some of his most trusted lieutenants, and everything pointed to a sweeping, old-time Republican victory. And then suddenly the Soviet thing loomed up like a grim ghoul of the night.

Long's Other Followers.

Long numbered among his followers all the Bolsheviki, the Soviet, the I. W. W., a large faction of the Republican Party, including many ministers of the gospel, deflected because of Senator Lodge's attitude in relation to the League of Nations, the striking policemen and all their disorderly followers, the Huns, the Finns, the Scandinavians, the Greeks who are followers of Venizelos—and there are very few Constantine Greeks in the Bay State—nearly all the Italian colony who parade in tribute of Fiume but who vote on the side their bread is buttered, and in addition a vast part of the Irish vote. Where was the great Coolidge 50,000 or 100,000 majority to come from?

Senator Crane laid aside his collection of Coolidge buttons "by 50,000," moved down to the Hotel Touraine a week earlier than he intended, and took off his coat, and preparations were made for a whirlwind campaign to the finish, the like of which the old Bay State has never known. By Wednesday or Thursday of this week there is not a man, woman, or child in Massachusetts who will not know that a grave danger may or may not confront them.

Soviet is a term that men have muttered under their breath. It is a word so fraught with disorder and disgovernment that it is rarely uttered. All Massachusetts was awakened to the danger which threatened it, and before the week was out the grave menace of Sovietism and all of its accompanying horrors was heralded from the housetops.

Great preparations were made for a whirlwind finish to the campaign. No less than four Governors of Western and Eastern States were invited and accepted invitations to speak in behalf of Governor Coolidge. More were expected during the wind-up week of the campaign, for it is doubtful if there is a Governor in the United States who would not do anything in his power to save this historic old State from the fate of Russia—and that is what Long's election means.

President Nicholas Murray Butler sounded the opening note in the last act of the campaign in an address at the Copley-Plaza Hotel before the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, entitled "Save America." And he pointed out very sagely the dangers that confront. Said he:

"We have to direct our attention to ways and means of preventing industrial groups from carrying on a war which more directly threatens the foundations of our American Government than any attack which the German and Austrian Governments launched against us.

"Civilization can be wrecked by the organized pursuit of selfish ends by any considerable group in our economic and social life. Now we are not going to prevent that kind of war and stop its ravages and destruction by force. Force is futile as an instrumentality against an idea."

Ominous words, with Long, the Soviet, in the offing!

Former President Taft came half way across the continent to battle with the Soviet candidate, and Senator Lodge returned to save his party from possible humiliating defeat in no small measure brought on by his attitude in relation to the League of Nations, the liquor question, and woman suffrage.

Silhouetted in the background is a powerful combination of forces that may carry the Soviet candidate to victory, but he will have to defeat a mighty force of Americans to win his laurels. And it is a battle to the life or death of the most cardinal American principles.

BLASCO IBANEZ THE APPROACHABLE

Spanish Author Makes Friends With All Men and Favors the Devil-Man, He Says

By MONTROSE J. MOSES.

(Times Wide World Photo.)

VICENTE BLASCO IBANEZ.

EVERY one on board the good ship Lorraine knew Vicente Blasco Ibáñez. As the steamship entered New York Harbor he was standing by the rail in quick conversation with a group of persons, his small eyes nervously roving, like the snap of a camera shutter, from one detail to another, his expression tense with interest.

Such a man is not difficult to know; his warm-heartedness is one of the greatest passports a traveler can have. It was not only the fact that probably every one around him on deck had read "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," but more significant still, from a personal standpoint, it was that those who gathered round him caught his enthusiasm. Here he was on good terms with a French architect, who was making his first trip since the war to fill his official post as consulting artist in the beautifying of Philadelphia. He was hail fellow well met with all the members of the French Labor Federation being sent to Washington for conference, and he hung on every word brought from shore about the outcome of the meetings last week; and when he laughed, joined by the sensitive Celtic group of laborites, there was no mistaking on which side sympathy stood.

Later on there was quick repartee between the Spanish novelist and the daughter of the Guatemalan Minister; there was a knowing exchange of words between him and the commandant of the ship when he wanted to go to a forbidden part of the deck to be photographed. Everything he requested he seemed to get; perhaps his surety and confidence are the magnets that draw success to him.

Blasco Ibáñez has a great deal to say about the United States, not of the fatuous kind such as the foreign visitor feels impelled to hand forth for publication, but based on a full knowledge of conditions and an understanding of our institutions.

"All last Summer," he remarked, "I spent six hours a day reading every book I could lay my hands on which dealt with your country. North, South, East, and West—everything had interest for me. In Nice I met many Americans; they were blasé about what I would see here; they told me that you did not have the scenery to be found in Europe. And I knew they were wrong, for is there not California, are there not the Rockies? I have come over to enjoy your largeness, your great spaces, your room to breathe. I want to live it, be a part of it. My friends said to me, knowing that when I was in the Argentine I became a cowboy: 'Ah, you will be corralling cattle on the plains.' Maybe so, maybe so."

This uttered with a shrug of the shoulders, an infectious smile, and a Spanish gesture, which was all-embracing. This is the type of man who before he leaves America will in all probability speak English well. For what he knows he knows.

"Though this is my first visit to the United States, I do not come ignorant of conditions here. I have read of your vested interests, of your trusts, of your Congressional investigations and your senatorial obstinacies. To that extent I came prepared. But I want to verify my impressions by observation. This much I do know about your country, as seen from Europe: That you are the hope of the years to be; that without you all Europe is like an old man, gray and taken with weakness. You are the youth of the world; in you is concentrated all the fresh romance which across seas they seem to have lost. Do you realize what it means for you to have gone to war for an ideal? You may have been flaunted for your commercial aspirations in the past, but now you can never again be so described—as the country of the dollar. In the history of humanity the United States occupies a unique position, due to this war. The French Revolution was a war for self-defense; its influence was widespread. Your Revolution was also in self-defense. But when you sent your army across seas you sent an army of idealists. It was not necessary, from the standpoint of the selfishness of nations, for you to go. From ocean to ocean your country is sufficient unto itself; you could get on very well without the rest of the world. But here is the significant thing: the world cannot get on without you. Let me tell you that the man who goes to the White House weighs more than all the Kings assembled together."

"I would rather not talk your politics, but I will chant your praise in international relations at the present moment as much as you wish. For you rescued Europe through generosity. In my new novel, 'Woman's Enemy,' I have dealt with this subject, and I have introduced your President, Mr. Wilson. Ah, what do I think of him? Well, he is one of the very first poets of the age; he soars high on wings that are long and catch the glint of sunlight. When he descends to earth his wings trail upon the ground and are trod upon."

In discussing American literature, Blasco Ibáñez struck the defect of the psychological novel done in the manner of the Europeans.

"It is wrong," he declared, "if your writers think that the triangular plot, based on the old morphine-decadent psychology, is the model for them to follow. The American novel must be of the soil. Frank Norris—'The Octopus'—it was of the soil. Your mine of literary wealth lies in the soil—it should be the novel of conquest of the land. Do you not glory in the rich background with which nature has endowed you? Landscape and character are the two essentials for the novelist; the plot will then take care of itself. Pay attention to the stupendous things and the small things will look out for themselves."

Blasco Ibáñez's novels are as generous in the spectacular as an eight-reel picture play.

"I am going to talk on novel writing," he said, "and perhaps say something about how I wrote 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.' When ever I select a subject I steep myself in it, reading all there is to be had, preparing myself so I will be one with the atmosphere. I won't say that I have come here definitely with the intention of writing a regional novel, laid in the United States, but I have no doubt that the next three or four books I publish will have some measure in them of your reaction on me. Just before I went to the front, under the guidance of French officers commanding the Fifth Army, I found myself in a house where there was nothing to read but a library of military volumes. I went through them in no time, and one evening at mess with the French General some technical point came up for discussion. A few hours before I had just finished a book on the subject, so I was able to enter into the argument. 'Mon Dieu,' exclaimed my military friend; 'how on earth did you ever get that book? I haven't had the time to read it.' I have always been an omnivorous reader."

Blasco Ibáñez would deplore the fact that we consider Fenimore Cooper too outré for modernized taste. To him Cooper suggests some of the excellence of the real modern novel.

"What the modern novel has brought to the reader," he averred, "is something which the old novel did not have—description. You may not know it, but the first North American landscape to play a part in fiction appeared in the work of Châteaubriand."

Blasco Ibáñez has always shown radical sympathies, much to the distaste of Spain and his own discomfiture, for many times has he been imprisoned, and still oftener has been obliged to leave the country. He has edited radical papers, been sent seven times to the Cortes as representative of the people of Valencia; and by the people he is careful to emphasize the working classes.

Friend of the Devil-Man.

"I am a bitter enemy of the professional politician," he insisted, "and while I am inclined to believe with my friend Barbusse that the gang of politicians is still at work in Europe, that the peace of Europe is 'the disquieting peace of disorder,' still real men will govern later. There are two sides to a man's nature, the God-man and the devil-man. I have always been on the side of the latter, for the devil means revolution. There is warfare between classes, and the only weapon that the laborer has is the strike. But after all it is only a weapon, not a solution. And we must find a solution. We will find a solution. In my own country the ones in favor of Germany were those who are institutionally against progress, whose very existence is bound up in the dead régime. The intellectual classes, the popular mass, were with the Allies."

As Blasco Ibáñez went down the gangplank, the zest of the discoverer was in his face, the excitement of the explorer. Delegations were waiting to meet him, telegraph boys were seeking him out with messages; the natives of America, far different from those who went to the shores to see Columbus tacking close to shore, knew who he was. A customs officer shook hands with him; he had read more of him than "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

TO MAKE A BUSINESS MAN OF UNCLE SAM

New Budget Plan Would Constitute President General Manager of Nation's Finance and End Present Wasteful Chaos

INDICATIONS are that changes will be made by the Senate in the House Budget bill, under which the President would become general financial manager as well as executive head of the nation.

Senator McCormick of Illinois, Chairman of the Senate's special committee, objects to the House measure for two reasons: On the ground that it does not empower any official to scale budget estimates, and because it does not provide immediate reform, but suggests that the President institute changes in the future.

It is not considered likely at Washington that the Senate committee will weaken the bill, because public realization of the vital need for budgetary reform is strong.

For fifty-two years, from 1866 to 1917, the revenues of the United States exceeded the expenditures in forty-one of those years, and the net excess of revenue for this period, chiefly from the liquor tax and the tariff, was $2,147,686,439. In all this time only $636,554,626 was collected in direct taxes, and from comparatively a few persons. What difference to the voter how much money was spent at Washington? And is it to be wondered that the standard by which Congressmen were most frequently judged at home was the amount of the plentiful Washington money they could get disbursed in the home district? In the future this test is likely to be reversed: How much have you been able to reduce taxes?

But there is another side to the bearing of this new situation on the average man. Up to 1917 the total expenditures of the Government from the foundation of the United States was $25,000,000,000. Since the beginning of the war Congress has appropriated $51,500,000,000, and, as financial authorities in Congress see it, the annual cost of government in the years ahead will be not less than one-sixth of the total cost of government from the foundation of the United States to the time we entered the war. It is further asserted that only the best management and economy at every point possible will hold annual expenditures down to that figure.

Where is this money to come from? The average citizen's pocket—direct.

Growth of Direct Taxes.

Indirect taxes, in amounts that count, are of the past. The tax on liquor, which used to pay half the cost of government, vanished with prohibition. The tariff, even according to the high-tariff men, cannot provide more than $500,000,000 a year, which back in Hayes's Administration would have come within $78,600,000 of paying for expenditures for the whole four years, but which does not make much showing against the estimated $6,000,000,000 expenditures for the current year.

The individual income tax and the corporation tax are to be the chief sources of revenue. This it is that is to centre public attention on the cost of Federal government in a manner never dreamed of before. In European countries, because of the pressure of direct taxes, this has long been a main standard by which the party in power is judged. Gladstone laid the foundation of his career by the Exchequer and Audit act, which, by establishing an effective check, stopped waste and extravagance. Similarly, a new road to power is to be opened to Presidential aspirants in this country, for, like the Englishman, the citizen of this country, impelled by necessity to keep the cost of living down, will turn more and more to the leader who can protect his pocketbook, it is predicted.

That is where the budget, a detailed balanced statement of proposed expenditures and revenues, will come in. There are three important parts to this budget system:

First, the making of the budget, in effect creating in the office of the President the function of general manager.

Second, the action by Congress on the budget; to make this most efficient a resolution proposes to create an Appropriation Committee of thirty-five members which shall exclusively report to the House all recommendations for appropriations, taking the place of the thirteen committees which now divide this work, each acting independently—a measure as revolutionary in House procedure as the provision charging the President with the responsibility of co-ordinating into one program all the different appropriations asked by the departments.

Third, the audit and control of the expenditures of the Government by a Controller General acting independently of the Administration and representing Congress. Under the present system of government the auditors are under the control of those they audit.

As to the first part—the President as general manager. The popular idea is the President has sweeping powers. His executive powers, conferred by the Constitution, are in fast few. Constitutionally the President has no administrative power. All the administrative powers have been granted to him by laws of Congress and when Congress has conferred administrative power it has been, except on extraordinary occasions, for a special purpose, as the Food Administration act. He has had no power, except that granted by the Overman war measure, to co-ordinate the departments under him from the standpoint of a general manager; the contact of President with the departments has been through the Cabinet meetings.

The Budget bill gives the President the power of economic co-ordination. The Bureau of the Budget, in charge of an officer representing the President, will be a bureau of administration and of information as to the Government as a whole, equipped with complete information as to the Government's varied activities and what methods are employed in performing them; a bureau on duty the year around—the eye and the memory of the President. Its first duty of compiling the budget out of the estimates turned into it—checking up on these for the aid of the President—in itself will make of it the correlating agency now lacking.

Businesslike Plan.

When, exercising his new function, the President comes into contact with the members of his Cabinet on the vital issue of paring down estimates, or (taking a larger view of a department's need than its chief officer) recommends an increase, the force of the general manager will make itself felt in the supreme way that holds in a big corporation. Around the budget, the constructiveness, the economy, the wisdom it represents, will centre the test of the Administration, and it may be seen that the new relations growing out of the budget—the President as general manager—will assume a greater and greater importance. A new President will have the budget agency at his service from the day he enters office. Incredible as it may seem to the general manager of a big private business not informed as to the actual situation, the President's office is not now an office of record. Each President takes away his papers when he leaves office. The incomer has a set of blank pigeonholes.

As to the second part—the action by Congress on the budget. The President's achievement will be to present to Congress a good budget, strong in what bulks, clean from waste. Congress's duty will be best expressed in preventing the passage of a bad budget, uncovering duplications, exposing hidden extravagances, correcting a parsimony that by saving a penny loses a pound. To accomplish this the present rules and organization of Congress are notoriously unsuited. Under the present system the departments and commissions of the Government make their estimates for the ensuing year. They are turned in to the Secretary of the Treasury. Without change (for the Secretary of the Treasury has no authority to alter an item) they are put together and sent to the House, to become incorporated, as finally changed, into many appropriation bills.

Altogether thirteen committees now report bills that call for appropriations of some kind, but the important ones are eight in number: The Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, and the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. There is no co-ordination here; many duplications, much waste result. In addition to the appropriation bills reported by these committees, a member may introduce a bill appropriating money for a special purpose. To give the House the organization to discharge its duty on the budget, a resolution prepared by the same committee that reported the Budget bill provides for a change in the rules of the House that all the estimates for appropriations from every department shall be submitted to a single appropriation committee, enlarged to thirty-five members, and that no appropriation bills shall be reported to the House except by this committee. This will be the budget committee.

The committees from whom it is proposed to take away the appropriation rights will continue, occupying themselves with all matters heretofore in their jurisdiction except the appropriation function. Here is the rub; Committees do not like to let their hold on the public purse go, but public opinion, insisting on all efforts to cut down the taxes, and the broad-minded initiative of some leading members of the House, are expected to force the adoption of the resolution. It will be a change in procedure, when carried out, such as no member of the House has seen.

As to the third part: Keeping track of how the money is spent by a bureau representing Congress, independent of the Administration. At present, in making appropriations, Congressional committees must rely mainly on witnesses called from the department concerned who are interested in heading off, if possible, any reduction in the amount asked for. The only way to uncover waste is by a Congressional investigation, a slow, clumsy and expensive method. The audit of all expenditures is in the control of the fund-spending departments, specifically in that of the Controller of the Treasury and the six auditors associated with him in the Treasury building. In a word, the spenders audit themselves, a system private business would not put up with.

Duties of Controller.

By the Budget bill all the powers and duties now imposed on the Controller of the Treasury and the auditors are transferred to an accounting department serving Congress alone, to be known as the office of the Controller General. It will be the duty of the Controller General and his staff to check up all expenditures, with the right as the representative of Congress to call to account inefficiency or waste wherever detected, and thus the control of expenditures will pass from the fund-spending departments to the fund-granting department—Congress, where it is held to belong. Out of its activity the office of Controller General will accumulate statistics and other data which will be of service not only in checking up the expenditure of money appropriated, but which will also be of perhaps greater importance in determining whether appropriations asked for should be granted. The Controller General will hold office for life; his post will be one of the most responsible in the Government.

Representative James W. Good of Iowa, Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and of the special committee on the budget, who is credited with having made a deeper study of this question than any other member of the present Congress, was asked in Washington if he thought the House would adopt the revolutionary change of centring appropriation authority in a committee of thirty-five.

"The plan," he answered, "is certainly one a business man would adopt, and one Congress will adopt if the highest degree of efficiency is to result. The present system, giving credit for the effective work that has been done in spite of it, might be likened to a man with a limited income who has eight children, (the eight big appropriations committees.) He gives each a checkbook with authority to draw on the bank where his limited amount of money is deposited. One child does not know what the other draws, and all draw; we can see what happens.

"We propose to centralize the power of reporting appropriations. The Appropriations Committee of Thirty-five should be composed of strong men with representatives on it of the committees which now have charge of the various appropriations, who would still continue as members of those committees. The plan is to have seven sub-committees of five members each who from study and experience will be qualified to handle the part of the budget assigned to them. For instance, on the sub-committee that has charge of the military appropriations there would be two or three members from the Military Affairs Committee. When the sub-committees have completed their work they would report to the full committee, which after going over the reports would present the budget to Congress, and the great debates of the House would centre around the budget. From the budget every member would know what the appropriations and the revenue were to be, and that would sober the action of men when called on for appropriations in the future.

"The committees which by this resolution would be deprived of the right to appropriate would be left with important work to do, notably the determination of policies. For example, the Military Affairs Committee would decide on the size of the army, the number of buildings needed for the army, and would have charge of all legislation dealing with the army in a regulatory way. The same is true of the other committees."

The Budget bill introduced in the Senate provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have charge of making the budget and the Bureau of the Budget shall be under his authority; arguments in favor of this are that the function is natural to the Treasury Department and that the President is now overladed with responsibilities. Answering this, Mr. Good said:

"In Great Britain the budget-making originates with the Treasury, but the British Treasury does little else. In the United States the Secretary of the Treasury has under him 31,000 employes. He has twelve great bureaus. No Secretary has yet been able to become familiar with the details of his own bureaus. Obviously in attending to his other duties the Secretary of the Treasury could give no consideration to the making of the budget.

Would Avert Friction.

"These facts are to me all-sufficient, but there is a second important reason. Ex-President Taft, Dr. Willoughby, Director of the Institute for Government Research; Charles D. Norton, President of the First Security Company of New York, and all of the thirty-five witnesses except four or five, in which were Secretary of the Treasury Glass and Assistant Secretary Leffingwell, argued that it would create friction at once between the Secretary of the Treasury and other Cabinet officials to place the Secretary of the Treasury, not the highest in rank, in a position where his duties in making the budget would require him to pass in an authoritative way on the recommendations of other members of the Cabinet.

"This responsibility should not be centred on any officer who holds his place by appointment. The President is the only officer elected by the people who sits in the Cabinet. In the situation as to taxes we are to face for years to come the people are going to look to the President to reduce expenses to the lowest point possible without sacrificing efficiency, and the President should not be permitted to hide behind some appointee in the exercise of this important function. We therefore make the President responsible and give him the machinery to perform the duty in the most comprehensive way. If he fails he must answer for his failure."

"Have you found it difficult to place a check on Government expenditures under the present system?"

"Very. The auditors are in the employ, or under the control, of those they audit. It is very difficult to get a Government auditor to appear before a committee of Congress. I have had them come to me privately and give information and add, 'but don't use my name or I will lose my job.' Thus the information could not be put before the committee. I think as much economy will come from the change to audit accounts by an agency responsible to Congress alone as from any benefit expected from the creation of the budget itself. Many duplications in expenditures are to be eliminated or combined. I find we have ten different bureaus collecting data on fresh meats; production of meats, nine bureaus; export of cheese, eight bureaus, six of which publish reports; collecting information on the price of cheese, six bureaus. We have six bureaus gathering information on the export of butter; six on the price of butter. We have ten bureaus collecting information on the consumption of coal; seven bureaus on the distribution of coal; six on the export of coal, and six on the import of coal.

"Under the present system, with not only the departments but the bureaus in them making their own estimates independently, the tendency is for such duplications to increase in number. In the face of the heavy taxes that confront us—now so oppressive that they tend to cripple production and to prevent the extension of our foreign trade and thus to block fundamental factors in reducing the high cost of living—is it not our duty to adopt a system that promises to search out and cut out all duplication, waste, and extravagance?"

Y. M. C. A. "HUTS" ARE CLOSED

By HORTENSE McDONALD.

THE Y. M. C. A. is writing "finish" to many forms of its war work in New York.

Getting back to a peace basis the association has closed activities at Eagle and Victory huts and Pelham Bay Naval Training Station. By order of city authorities the two larger huts closed yesterday, and the buildings will be torn down at once. As the record now stands, more than a million men have been entertained at the Bryant and Battery Park Huts since January.

The inspiration out of which grew the work carried on at our Eagle Hut was furnished by the splendid example set at Eagle Hut in London. Interesting reports of the activities there had reached this country during 1917, and a committee of women, under the leadership of Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, was desirous of attempting a similar work in New York City.

In those days the city was crowded with men on leave. Amusement places were filled to overflowing. Hotels, crowded to the doors, offered no suitable lounging or recreation place where a soldier or sailor could sit down for a few minutes' rest or a quiet half-hour of letter writing.

The food problem was a paramount question with leave men. "Where do we eat?" was on every soldier's lips. When he asked it, he wanted to be directed to a place that would not leave him stranded.

The hut was opened on June 21, 1918, and its doors were not closed until yesterday. The service performed included the following: Free sightseeing trips, sleeping accommodations, motion picture programs, billiard and pool, entertainments and socials, employment bureau with vocational and educational advice, free sewing, games, Post Office and Government checks, bank drafts and money orders cashed, money orders sold, foreign money exchanged, half-rate and free theatre tickets, information bureau, reading and writing room, parcel checking, and a cafeteria that specialized in home cooking.

In its varied activities the hut has cooperated with all other welfare organizations. When every cot was occupied men were directed to Red Cross, Knights of Columbus or Salvation Army lodgings and these organizations in turn called upon the hut staff for beds or foods during particularly strenuous times.

Everything was sold as nearly at cost as possible in the canteen. Women, many of social prominence, worked untiringly behind the counter, serving eight hours a day. At first considered an experiment, the canteen developed to such an extent that a daily average of 1,750 men ate there. Over 250 volunteer workers have given their services. During the last six months 316,058 meals have been served.

Victory Hut was opened at Battery Park the middle of last January. Charles P. Kinsman was selected to be the first secretary and Mrs. Vincent Astor, who had just returned from France, where she conducted a canteen at Bordeaux, consented to be the leader of the women's work. Four shifts of volunteer workers and a staff of capable secretaries carried out the plans of the leaders.

During the Summer months the Smith College Unit, consisting of forty girls, who voluntarily gave six weeks of their vacation to canteen work, served in two shifts of twenty each at the two huts.

Uniformity

Uniformity is the secret of success of any good product.

It's the reason Willard Batteries with Threaded Rubber Insulation are making such a wonderful record of long life without repairs.

Ordinary materials used for insulation between battery plates are taken just as they come from nature and can't be made uniform by any process.

But Threaded Rubber Insulation is built up by a scientific manufacture. Every piece of it is like every other and almost invariably Threaded Rubber lasts as long as battery plates.

No wonder many of these batteries have given three and four years of uninterrupted good service.

WAIT for the Revolutionary Six

ONCE again we council you to wait.

Price, Performance, Economies and Fine Appearance will well justify a little more patience.

At the offices of the Corporation, a great flood of inquiries comes in on the tide of every mail. At the great Elizabeth, N. J. plant, every nerve is being strained to hasten the Day of Big Production—400 to 500 Sixes, day after day.

By this time, all America is realizing that the Six is not merely the most remarkable car of the year, but one of the few Epoch-Making Cars of Automobile History.

Automobile men on all sides are complimenting us for our American spirit in overcoming the many obstacles, which, for years, had made the coming of such a car impossible.

Today the Six is fully developed. Each of the revolutionary forward steps has justified itself during two years of testing, over asphalt and mud, levels and hills, smooth roads and ruts—200,000 miles of it.

Each of the new principles has won the approval of prominent members of the Society of Automotive Engineers. One of them, the new three point Cantilever Spring Suspension, accomplishes a remarkable result—in effect adding a good 30 inches to the 112 inch wheel-base and giving this light economic car (approximately 2,400 pounds) all the road luxury of those ponderous extravagant palaces of 140 inch base. The chassis also is radically simple—eliminating costly material and greatly expediting quantity production.

A car of handsome appearance, that gets you about as only a Six can—averaging 17 to 20 miles per gallon of gasoline throughout the tests

The People's Six—Economic to Buy—Economic to Keep.

Shortly, from Elizabeth, the base of production, great train loads of Sixes will be shipping to the four points of the compass.

And at the other extensive plants of the Willys Corporation—at Toledo, O., Syracuse and Poughkeepsie, N. Y., production of the Auto-Lite, New Process Gears and Willys Light will go on in the never-yet-achieved effort to keep pace with increasing demand. To date over a million and a half Auto-Lite sets have been produced and marketed—New Process Gears are being produced for over 2,000 automotive vehicles per day—the Willys Light is just coming into production, and, in one single month, has booked orders for 20,000 sets.

Each of these industries is a source of supply for the new Six—in fact, practically every item of the new car, from raw material to finished product, is produced by the Willys Corporation, or by controlled and closely allied industries.

Anyone desiring further information about the plans and car program of the Willys Corporation should write for our booklet:

NOISE IN MOTOR CAR MAY BE DUE TO GEARS

By H. CLIFFORD BROKAW,
Technical Director, West Side Y. M. C. A. Automobile School.

Recently a driver asked me to locate a grind in his clutch. It was noticed that at certain speeds there was a sound as if there were a dry or worn-out bearing, and it caused a vibration throughout the car. An inspection of the clutch failed to disclose trouble there, so I had one rear wheel jacked up and got under the car to hunt for the source of the noise. Immediately it was made plain that it did not come from the clutch, but from the rear axle assembly.

When a growl is discovered in the rear axle it does not necessarily indicate that the gears are not meshing properly. It might mean a lack of lubrication, which must be determined by inspection. The manufacturers exercise great pains to get the gears so that they run true and mesh properly, so that they operate silently and it may be assumed that when a car is delivered the adjustment has been made to the most silent position. It will stay right unless the adjustment works loose or the bearings or gears become worn.

On each side of the differential master gear there is a bearing which takes the side thrust caused by the operation of the gears. The bearings sometimes wear and allow the gears to go deeper in mesh and make a humming sound, which is noticeable only when going around a corner, being generally silent at other times. This is because in turning the wheel slides the axle in for the amount of the play, meshing the gears deeper.

Wear in the thrust bearings on each side of the master gear causes another trouble which makes a clatter rather than a hum or growl, when the wear becomes excessive. Then it allows the master gear to move away from the pinion far enough to skip teeth. There will be uneven gears of action in this case. If the gears were permanently out of mesh the car would stop, but the motion of the car would slide the axle in and out so that the gears would mesh for a time and then skip, with resultant clash and noise. The same result would come from uneven wear of the teeth.

It should be remembered that where there are gears usually there is wear. Occasionally a set will be made just the right toughness and hardness, and will last for the life of the car. Others are too hard; if they get a little out of adjustment they will chip off, the chips working among the teeth, breaking off a tooth or chewing up a number, with consequent noisy action. Where one tooth is broken there is a decided knock. If the gears are too soft they wear rapidly and gradually come to a knife edge. There is then danger of breaking off under a little extra strain, climbing a steep hill or when the clutch is let in with a jerk.

This latter condition may be determined by jacking up one rear wheel and putting the gears in mesh, and then rocking the wheel back and forth to see if there is excessive play. In doing this it is necessary to see what play there is from other causes, such as universal joint play or from loose key in rear axle; the remainder of the play is in the differential. It should not be more than two inches of motion of the outside of the tire.

Back of the driving pinion there is another thrust bearing subject to wear. When it does wear it allows the gears to get slightly out of mesh, and this makes a noise which can be removed by adjustment.

Since clicks and humming and growls indicate undue conditions, it is up to the driver to either locate them himself or consult some one who can. If the driver studies his car he ought to be able to discover and remedy all but the most obscure cases.

Consistent Care

As a rule the better types of cars show consistent care. Their bodies, their engines, and their transmissions display more than cursory attention, for their owners understand the care of a car. Nor are we guided solely by the former owner's statements. We do our own inspecting and finally call in our Service Engineers, competent men who can give us a mechanical expert's opinion. Our increasing sales and our many satisfied customers are conclusive evidence that our insistence on consistent care has been an important factor in our success.

We carry a wide selection of the better types of cars, all of which show consistent care.

You have a new joy in store for you when you take your first ride in the AMERICAN Balanced Six.

Ever afterward motoring will have a new meaning for you.

Cradled over the Balanced AMERICAN chassis, you ride with a new ease and security. Your car holds the road at all speeds and under all conditions of travel. Rough stretches become pleasant memories. Ticklish curves lose their awesomeness. Distance disappears in Miles of Smiles.

The AMERICAN Balanced Six is the first instance in which the principle of balance has been correctly applied in the construction of cars of light weight.

122 Inch Wheelbase
45 Horsepower

By a scientific distribution of weight the load is divided over each of the four wheels almost to a fraction of a pound. The chassis is not overweighted at the front, nor underweighted at the rear. Each wheel carries an equal share of the load. The results of the application of this principle are evident in the superb riding qualities of this Balanced Six, which have caused it to be known far and wide as the Smile Car.

Behind its wheel you just smile the miles away through breezy hours of gladness.

MOTOR TRUCKS MAY PAY HIGHER LICENSE FEE

Word has gone out that the motor truck owners in New York State will not escape an effort on the part of the Legislature at its coming session to enact higher license fees. The passenger car owners paid the penalty of additional taxation last year, the new fees going into effect on Feb. 1, next. The officers of the Motor Truck Association of America, with offices in this city, are preparing to combat any drastic legislation which would impose such hardships as to curtail the legitimate growth of motor truck transportation, the necessity and value of which to the community have been shown so convincingly during the war period and since the signing of the armistice.

The legislators will evidently be influenced in their action to place a higher annual fee upon motor truck operators on the plea of excessive road costs and the actual need of more desirable highways to permit successful motor transportation. Governor Smith has already indicated in a recent statement that a new good roads bond issue would come before the Legislature, his recognition of the fact that better highways are absolutely essential to the industrial welfare of the State. Motor truck owners will be asked to contribute a larger share toward the State funds than hitherto. The chief opposition against any new legislation will probably not be so much against a reasonably increased license fee as against attempts which may be made to reduce maximum weights and place heavy restrictions upon loads.

The rapid development of motor truck transportation and the assurance of its future progress have opened up many new road problems which are of vital importance to highway engineers as well as motor truck users. The opinion is being expressed that it may be necessary to limit the use of heavy motor commercial vehicles to the main, well-built highways, prohibiting their use on the poorer country roads. Until the road system of the country attains a higher degree of excellence than at the present time, it may be necessary for operators of heavy trucks to abandon willingly such roads which, if freely used for the transport of large loads, would injure the neighboring communities far more than the motor truck lines would benefit them.

A maximum load of 28,000 pounds, including the weight of the truck and its burden, has been tentatively agreed upon by truck manufacturers, truck owners, and highway engineers, and this standard will be pressed in all the State Legislatures. It becomes a matter of grave concern as to whether the truck shall be allowed on feeder roads. It is of concern to the public to protect its investment in the type of road which composes the greater portion of its highways; it is of concern to the engineer who must provide, as best he can, for the ever-increasing maintenance charges due to traffic conditions, and it is of concern to the truck operator who wants to know whether he can buy a uniform weight of truck of the maximum size, or whether he is to be held up with certain portions of his business at the side roads, being compelled to transfer to a lighter truck to complete the transportation. In his case it might be advisable to use the light truck for the entire movement.

As it is evident that our highways cannot all be made to bear 28,000-pound loads the year round, it will be necessary to consider the protection of the light constructed roads before serious damage is done, thereby creating animosity against the destructive agent.

"It is common knowledge," states the Motor Truck Club of New Jersey, "that many regulations of motor trucks are continually disregarded by operators. The first consideration in the enforcement of such a set of regulations would seem to be the posting at each road intersection of either printed signs or easily distinguished symbols to inform the driver what regulations apply to the road which he is about to traverse. There are many cases, no doubt, where adjacent crossroads would call for entirely different traffic regulations."

New York State permits a maximum load on four wheels of 25,000 pounds. New Jersey allows 30,000 pounds, the general average for the majority of States being 28,000 pounds. Wise motor truck owners are recognizing the need of careful use of the highways. The wisdom of this view has been pertinently brought before its members in the current Bulletin of the Motor Trade Club of New Jersey.

"What we as an organization should aim at," it says, "is the elimination of the possibility of the present laws being revised along more drastic lines. How can we do it? First, by continual education of our members in fundamentals of their duty toward the public. Second, by obeying the law to the letter ourselves. Third, by advocating a more stringent enforcement of the present laws. By doing the latter few will suffer. By adopting an attitude of indifference we will face in the near future legislation that will be oppressive."

This is a common sense statement of reasonable action which might be accepted by all motor truck associations.

USE OF ROAD FUNDS.

Many States Devoting Federal Money to Well-Defined Systems.

That Federal aid funds should hereafter be expended only upon roads which are included in an intercounty system of main highways is becoming a fixed policy in many States, President David Jameson of the American Automobile Association points out, despite the fact that the present road act does not require such use of the money.

Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wyoming, and Washington are States which recently have practically decided to confine their Federal money to roads that count in well-defined State systems.

"If it is the correct thing, and we believe that it is, for the wealthier and more settled States to give assistance through the Federal Treasury to the less populated and undeveloped parts of the country," adds Mr. Jameson, "this national co-operation carries with it an obligation to the State to function as a Commonwealth in the form of intercounty roads built and maintained entirely at State expense."

The Most Popular Car for All Seasons

THE family chauffeur, very generally, is going into other fields nowadays. For the family type of closed car has come to stay. It has come to stay and multiply, because it has so well established its place in life.

Expressive of the very best development of the modern closed car is the new series Chandler Sedan—handsome, dignified, beautifully finished and furnished, and most comfortable in all seasons.

This new body reflects the master coach-builder's art and skill in every detail of its design and workmanship. The window posts are a permanent part of the body, adding to its strength and quietness, though the windows may be open or closed or adjusted just as the weather or the wish may dictate. A solid front seat increases the strength of the body. The interior is upholstered in silk plush, and the handsome fittings are of dull silver finish. Seven persons are seated in perfect comfort, or five when the auxiliary chairs are not in use.

The Chandler Car is the most closely priced fine car in America, and a good many people know it. Your early order would serve you against disappointment.

Overland

TRADE MARK REG

The Greatest Improvement In Riding Comfort Since The Introduction of Pneumatic Tires

HERE is a brand new type of car. It solves the problem which has baffled automotive engineers—how to combine riding comfort with light weight and economy.

Our new Three-Point Suspension Springs make this possible.

These are the first springs of their kind and they are made of chrome vanadium steel. They are exclusive with Overland.

Because of these springs, Overland 4 combines the riding qualities of large heavy, expensive, long wheelbase cars, together with the advantages and economy of small light cars.

With 100-inch wheelbase, Overland 4 has the luxurious riding ease of 130-inch Springbase.

The exclusive Three-Point Suspension Springs cushion the car so that it rides well on all roads: they reduce choppy rebounds and side swaying, protect the car from road shocks and prolong its life, minimize twisting or racking of frame and body, enable the car to hold the road better.

The car and passengers ride smoothly as though floating, free from road shocks that the springs ward off.

But this new riding comfort, possible only with these Three-Point Suspension Springs, is but one of the advantages of Overland 4.

Its light weight makes possible great economy of gasoline and tires.

High quality materials insure durability. All vital parts of the front axle and steering gear and all highly stressed gears and shafts for driving the car are made of alloy steel.

The equipment list of Overland 4 is high grade, including Auto-Lite Starter and Lighting System—Electric Horn—Marshall Divan Upholstery Springs—Demountable Rims—Three Speed Transmission—Slanting Rain Vision Windshield—Tillotson Carburetor—U. S. L. Batteries and many other high quality conveniences.

In every respect Overland 4 is a quality car. The body is all steel, all enamel, the brightest, hardest, most lasting finish.

Overland 4 has been tested for two years and more than 250,000 miles over the Rocky Mountains, prairies, through deep mud and scorching deserts—through quick, sharp climatic changes. As a result of these tests we were able to judge the car's performance under every condition and to perfect it before offering it to the public.

There is no previous car of any size or price to adequately compare with the character of service Overland 4 introduces.

The farther you ride in it the more you will appreciate it. Come in, see the car and ask for booklet. The demand will be greater than the supply for a long time.

Overland 4 Touring, $845; Roadster, $845; Coupe, $1325; Sedan, $1375. Prices f.o.b. Toledo.

MINERS' WAGES IN CONGRESS

House Listens to Figures Indicating an Average Net Per Man of About $200

It was hard to keep the crisis in the threatened miners' strike from bobbing up in Congress last week, even when subjects remote from it were under consideration. Thus miners' wages captured the floor of the House for a few minutes and held it with close interest. It began with this question, which sprang as a spark from the discussion of the measure to raise the pay of the firemen of the District of Columbia:

"Is it true that the miners of Illinois are paid only $75 a month?"

The question was evidently in reference to the statement that had just been given out at Springfield, Ill., by John L. Lewis, acting President of the United Mine Workers of America, that during the last twelve months the miners of the United States had averaged only $75 a month, or $900 for the entire period, owing to the seasonal way the mines were operated. This is what followed:

Mr. Woods of Virginia—Mr. Chairman, since the question of the coal situation has been injected into this discussion, although I did not intend to say anything about it, I wish now to say something on that. The gentleman from Illinois asked a question in regard to whether the miners of Illinois were paid only $75 a month. I hold in my hand a statement of the pay of miners. I assume that these are the best paid miners. I am going to take the risk of trespassing upon the patience of the House to read a few of the items. These men work in a non-union field. They are supplied with coal in their houses. They are supplied with a house with oak and parquet floors. Here is the account of Sidney Deskins of Borderland, W. Va., for March, 1919. His gross receipts were $271.07, and after taking out his expenses the balance due him was $216.97. In the case of James Jones his total for the month of March was $251.96 and his net $190.96. That takes out his doctor's bill and his light and, in some cases, his insurance.

Mr. Kitchin—His house rent and light?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—Yes; house rent and light. Here is the account of Harry Pinson. For the month of March his total was $388.44, and his net was $240.94. Harrison Crum, total, $420.70; balance or net, $417.45. He is a single man. He did not pay any rent.

Mr. Blanton—That is more than many Government officials receive.

Mr. Woods of Virginia—A. Zimmerman, Sr., total for the month of March, 1919, $421.74; net, $336.24.

Mr. Carss—Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—Yes.

Mr. Carss—What kind of duty was that man engaged on?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—He is mining coal by the ton on the car.

Mr. Carss—Is he a pick miner, or does he work a mining machine?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—All he has to do is to put in his little blast and load the coal on the car.

Mr. Denison—Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—Yes.

Mr. Denison—What are his hours?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—Seven hours; not over eight.

Mr. Bland of Indiana—Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—Yes.

Mr. Bland of Indiana—Have you any account of the number of hours he worked to earn that $421.74?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—I have not. April, 1919, Sidney Deskins, total, $344; net, $300.50. Account of A. Zimmerman, Sr., April, 1919, total, $250.04; net, $113.04.

Mr. Madden—Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. Woods of Virginia—May, 1919, Sidney Deskins, total, $390.03; net, $336.53.

Mr. Madden—The deduction of the house rent and electric light and things of that sort really ought not to be made, because the net earnings of an ordinary man will be what he gets, out of which he must pay his rent and other expenses.

Mr. Woods of Virginia—All that he pays out of this is his smithing and powder bill. His powder bill is $2.50, and his rent is $9, and he pays for the blacksmithing of his tools. All the tools he needs are the pick and shovel and auger, and 50 cents a month is charged for keeping his tools in order.

Mr. Kitchin—I understand some deductions were made for store account, scrip, in some cases amounting to $40.

Mr. Madden—I say it is not fair to say "net," as the amount he receives after paying his grocery bills and lights and other things. It ought to be confined only to his powder bill and tools.

Mr. Woods of Virginia—His insurance is taken out.

I give the statement, which has been furnished me, as to wages earned for the months indicated for the miners named at the Borderland Coal Corporation mines at Borderland, W. Va.

This is not a union field, but my understanding is that prices corresponding to the union scale are paid. Mining conditions are not exceptional, and the miners are not paid higher, or at least not materially so, and the mining conditions are materially no better for the miner than generally prevail in that field. Miners are charged $2 per month per room for frame houses, most of which have bathrooms attached and are sewered, and $3 per month per room for brick houses. They pay for their own powder, which runs from $2 to $9; smithing bills, 50 cents per month; furnish their own tools, consisting of shovel, pick, coal auger, and perhaps an iron bar. They are not charged for timber or propping. Single men pay 75 cents for medical attention, and married men, with families, $1.25 per month.

It may be that a few of those listed below are contract miners; that is, they employ a helper and receive pay for the coal the miner and the helper both mine. The coal is cut at the footing by the company with cutting machines. The miner works as many hours as he chooses, and is paid by the ton or car. Their average day is from seven to eight hours, but, of course, during the period shown by the following statement there were quite a number of days in which the miners were not working owing to car shortage. These cases may be exceptional, but are sufficient to show what can be earned by the steady miner.

Representative Oscar Bland of Indiana, who represents a coal mining district, said in a speech made later in the week that the wages cited by Representatives Woods and others did not furnish a fair index of miners' pay. He added that he thought the explanation of the seemingly high individual wages was that the pay of several men was being drawn in the name of one. He also said that while since 1917 miners' wages had risen 80 per cent the operators were receiving 100 per cent. more for coal.

The list showing miners' pay is as follows:

CARUSO LEAVING MEXICO.

SIGNOR CARUSO, who sings a farewell to Mexico tomorrow, has written picturesque accounts of his first impressions and experiences there. Mrs. Caruso consented to the printing of extracts from his letters, which the tenor wrote in English, with a vivid and personal touch that his New York admirers will recognize. Speaking of Mexico's capital he wrote:

"This town is very funny. One moment is perfectly clear and in another moment the clouds are so strong and dark and streaming like a river. Then after half an hour clear again."

Caruso told feelingly of an open-air performance of "Carmen" in the famous Bull Ring:

"I went to the Plaza," he wrote. "There was a beautiful sun shining, but I felt my voice like midnight—dark—and I was trembling. I dress quickly and was ready for performance at 3:30 exactly. We began, I went on. The public liked me, but were not wild.

"Then the weather began to change and big clouds began to come up. In fact, before the first act finished, commenced the rain, and Carmen (Bezanzoni) and I were all wet. We suppose the public goes away, but no one moves.

"The second act begins with heavier rain—and there was a big spectacle. Thousands of umbrellas open and cover all the area of the Plaza. We don't see any head or hear the orchestra. We hope always to stop, but the public was there.

"I sing my big Romanza (the flower song) there in the hard rain and the public makes me big ovation. It was very funny to see that enormous black mass around the Plaza, and, with the exception of some blue and red spots, all was umbrellas. It was worse by the third act. We could not stop unless the public started first. They stayed on and made big applause at end of Act III.

"Some one told the public we would not finish. I was in my dressing room and heard a great noise and sent out to find what it was. They inform me what happened. Quickly I said to tell the public the performance would continue. Every one went back to their places which they had left to break the stage!

"We finished in a heavy drizzle and half of the people didn't hear, for the noise of rain on the umbrellas. We were all soaked, but the public was happy because we did not leave them. Everybody appreciated my staying and continuing the performance, because generally it is the artist who first leaves the stage, and then the public. The receipts for the performance were $45,000."

FREE HOSPITAL SERVICE AT STAKE

$3,000,000 Needed to Enable Forty-six New York Institutions to Keep Up the Work

By HENRY J. FISHER,
Chairman, Executive Committee, United Hospital Fund.

NEW YORK CITY is overlooking a tremendous factor in its fight to reduce the high cost of living. This is the daily sickness which could be cured, prevented or shortened.

This daily sickness of approximately 180,000 New Yorkers is estimated to take $63,000,000 a year from their wages alone. Obviously it is a loss New Yorkers cannot afford at a time when every day's pay is required to meet the high prices of everything.

But that is not all. In addition to taking away $63,000,000 needed by working people to defray the cost of their daily living and in adding to their burdens by the usual expenses incurred in illness, it means the elimination of the productive labor of most of the 180,000 sick who are constantly incapacitated, and of the even greater number who are handicapped by physical defects which should be cured.

This is an economic as well as a social waste for which a readily applicable remedy exists. That remedy is the hospital service of the city. The hospitals are waging a constant but inadequately supported war on all these conditions. Hospitals are the trenches in which the army of doctors and nurses operate in their attack on disease and its resulting hardships in the community. They are the scenes of great battles as well as training grounds where doctors and nurses are prepared for all the smaller fights against illness. The fighters fighting these battles, however, can no more be expected to win unless properly supported by the people back of the line than the American Expeditionary Force could have been expected to win had they not been supported at home.

One in Ten Cared For.

At the present time only one sick person in ten is able to get proper hospital care. Those who can pay for it usually get it, but the needy often have to do without. Providing free treatment is the biggest problem the hospitals have to solve in waging the battle with illness and its costly social effects.

The United Hospital Fund, at the request of the hospitals, is endeavoring to solve this free treatment problem for the hospitals of Manhattan and the Bronx. Forty-six of the most important hospitals in these two boroughs have united in this work through the Fund.

Last year it cost these hospitals about $9,500,000 to do their share in caring for the sick. They were able to care for 147,422 persons in the hospitals and to give some treatment to about 600,000 more through clinics, dispensaries, &c.

The patients who were able to pay for their treatment and the income from the endowments of the hospitals provided only about $6,500,000 of this $9,500,000 costs. The deficit of $3,000,000 was just about what it cost to provide the free treatment.

There was no satisfactory way of meeting this $3,000,000 deficit last year. Solicitation of private contributions was the only resource. It proved to be an unreliable one, for there was a final deficit for the hospitals in general. This deficit had to be met by such unsound measures as calls on the invested funds of the institutions in some cases.

If this problem were to continue, a sure deficit every year for the cost of the free treatments, the hospitals would soon find themselves called upon to choose between giving up their free work and facing bankruptcy.

It is unthinkable that they should be forced to make either choice, so the hospitals have called on the United Hospital Fund to aid them with the problem. They have asked the Fund to provide for the free work of the hospitals by raising the necessary sum, which will then be apportioned among the hospitals in proportion to each one's need.

Call for $1,000,000.

The first appeal will be for $1,000,000. The public will be asked to contribute this sum, or as much more of the $3,000,000 needed as possible, during the time from Nov. 17, to Nov. 24.

The appeal will be directed by an executive committee, made up of men representing this old-established Fund, that has been providing free hospital treatment for forty years: of representatives of the important civic associations that have always interested themselves as allies in the Fund's work, and of representatives of the hospitals for whose free work it provides.

The members of this executive committee are: George Blumenthal, William C. Breed, William M. Kingsley, Henry R. Kunhardt, Ivy L. Lee, J. P. Morgan, William Fellowes Morgan, Robert Olyphant, E. H. Outerbridge, George Emlen Roosevelt, James Speyer, W. V. S. Thorne, Howard Townsend, Arnold Wood, Allen Wardwell, Albert H. Wiggin, and Charles A. Wimpfheimer.

Mr. Olyphant is the president of the Fund. Mr. Wiggin is the treasurer. Contributions will be received by him at 57 Broadway, or by Mrs. James Speyer, treasurer of the Woman's Auxiliary, at 1058 Fifth Avenue.

The cost of providing free treatment in the hospitals has risen tremendously. In 1916 it cost a hospital $2.33 a day for each patient in a free ward. By 1918 it had risen 58 per cent. to $3.17. Now it is more than $3.50 and still going up.

Of the 2,443,562 days of hospital treatment provided last year by the forty-six United Hospitals, 1,282,079 days, more than half, were free days. In addition, they answered 38,270 ambulance calls and gave 1,753,552 treatments through clinics and dispensaries.

Any hospital in Manhattan or the Bronx may become a member of this non-sectarian Fund, provided only that it is duly incorporated, has had for three years not less than thirty-five ward beds, and has given during that period not less than 5,000 days of free service.

FREE HOSPITAL SERVICE AT STAKE

$3,000,000 Needed to Enable Forty-six New York Institutions to Keep Up the Work

By HENRY J. FISHER,
Chairman, Executive Committee, United Hospital Fund.

NEW YORK CITY is overlooking a tremendous factor in its fight to reduce the high cost of living. This is the daily sickness which could be cured, prevented or shortened.

This daily sickness of approximately 180,000 New Yorkers is estimated to take $63,000,000 a year from their wages alone. Obviously it is a loss New Yorkers cannot afford at a time when every day's pay is required to meet the high prices of everything.

But that is not all. In addition to taking away $63,000,000 needed by working people to defray the cost of their daily living and in adding to their burdens by the usual expenses incurred in illness, it means the elimination of the productive labor of most of the 180,000 sick who are constantly incapacitated, and of the even greater number who are handicapped by physical defects which should be cured.

This is an economic as well as a social waste for which a readily applicable remedy exists. That remedy is the hospital service of the city. The hospitals are waging a constant but inadequately supported war on all these conditions. Hospitals are the trenches in which the army of doctors and nurses operate in their attack on disease and its resulting hardships in the community. They are the scenes of great battles as well as training grounds where doctors and nurses are prepared for all the smaller fights against illness. The fighters fighting these battles, however, can no more be expected to win unless properly supported by the people back of the line than the American Expeditionary Force could have been expected to win had they not been supported at home.

One in Ten Cared For.

At the present time only one sick person in ten is able to get proper hospital care. Those who can pay for it usually get it, but the needy often have to do without. Providing free treatment is the biggest problem the hospitals have to solve in waging the battle with illness and its costly social effects.

The United Hospital Fund, at the request of the hospitals, is endeavoring to solve this free treatment problem for the hospitals of Manhattan and the Bronx. Forty-six of the most important hospitals in these two boroughs have united in this work through the Fund.

Last year it cost these hospitals about $9,500,000 to do their share in caring for the sick. They were able to care for 147,422 persons in the hospitals and to give some treatment to about 600,000 more through clinics, dispensaries, &c.

The patients who were able to pay for their treatment and the income from the endowments of the hospitals provided only about $6,500,000 of this $9,500,000 costs. The deficit of $3,000,000 was just about what it cost to provide the free treatment.

There was no satisfactory way of meeting this $3,000,000 deficit last year. Solicitation of private contributions was the only resource. It proved to be an unreliable one, for there was a final deficit for the hospitals in general. This deficit had to be met by such unsound measures as calls on the invested funds of the institutions in some cases.

If this problem were to continue, a sure deficit every year for the cost of the free treatments, the hospitals would soon find themselves called upon to choose between giving up their free work and facing bankruptcy.

It is unthinkable that they should be forced to make either choice, so the hospitals have called on the United Hospital Fund to aid them with the problem. They have asked the Fund to provide for the free work of the hospitals by raising the necessary sum, which will then be apportioned among the hospitals in proportion to each one's need.

Call for $1,000,000.

The first appeal will be for $1,000,000. The public will be asked to contribute this sum, or as much more of the $3,000,000 needed as possible, during the time from Nov. 17, to Nov. 24.

The appeal will be directed by an executive committee, made up of men representing this old-established Fund, that has been providing free hospital treatment for forty years: of representatives of the important civic associations that have always interested themselves as allies in the Fund's work, and of representatives of the hospitals for whose free work it provides.

The members of this executive committee are: George Blumenthal, William C. Breed, William M. Kingsley, Henry R. Kunhardt, Ivy L. Lee, J. P. Morgan, William Fellowes Morgan, Robert Olyphant, E. H. Outerbridge, George Emlen Roosevelt, James Speyer, W. V. S. Thorne, Howard Townsend, Arnold Wood, Allen Wardwell, Albert H. Wiggin, and Charles A. Wimpfheimer.

Mr. Olyphant is the president of the Fund. Mr. Wiggin is the treasurer. Contributions will be received by him at 57 Broadway, or by Mrs. James Speyer, treasurer of the Woman's Auxiliary, at 1058 Fifth Avenue.

The cost of providing free treatment in the hospitals has risen tremendously. In 1916 it cost a hospital $2.33 a day for each patient in a free ward. By 1918 it had risen 58 per cent. to $3.17. Now it is more than $3.50 and still going up.

Of the 2,443,562 days of hospital treatment provided last year by the forty-six United Hospitals, 1,282,079 days, more than half, were free days. In addition, they answered 38,270 ambulance calls and gave 1,753,552 treatments through clinics and dispensaries.

Any hospital in Manhattan or the Bronx may become a member of this non-sectarian Fund, provided only that it is duly incorporated, has had for three years not less than thirty-five ward beds, and has given during that period not less than 5,000 days of free service.

Contributions to the fund may secure proper hospital treatment for needy cases by [illegible] Long Island College Hospital, Seventh Ave. and Clinton Street.

Some day the city may be able to take over all hospital work and carry on the fight against illness through municipal institutions. But it will take a lot of time and a lot of tax money to provide for them to handle the whole burden. Meanwhile, the forty-six hospitals of the United Hospital Fund have a $40,000,000 "human repair shop" doing the work, and doing it well. They provide for their patients the same medical skill and devoted attention they provide for their richest patrons. And they provide with that all-important touch of human sympathy that is so much better than the fine, but necessarily more or less mechanical attention of the public institution. All they need is the money to pay the day to day running expenses of the free work.

The forty-six hospital members of the fund cover every field of the work and every part of Manhattan and the Bronx. They are:

GENERAL.—Mount Sinai, New York, St. Luke's Presbyterian, Post Graduate, Lenox Hill, Roosevelt, Lincoln, Lebanon, Beth Israel, French, Flower, Sydenham, St. Mark's, Knickerbocker, Hahnemann, Volunteer, Polyclinic, and Park.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN.—Lying-In, St. Mary's, Women's, Nursery and Child's, Home, Infirmary, Babies, Children, Easton, Maternity, Bellevue, Misericordia, Israel, Maternity and Hospital for Women.

SPECIAL HOSPITALS.—Orthopaedic, Ruptured and Crippled, Deformities, Joint Diseases, New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, Manhattan Eye, Ear and Throat, Ophthalmic, Knapp Memorial, Skin and Cancer, Memorial, House of Rest, Consumptives, and Neurological Institute.

First Cruise of 1920

TO THE WEST INDIES

From bleak America to the Sunny Isles of Rest and Relaxation.
Sailing January 3, 1920, from New York on Steamship Calamares.

After Christmas always comes a slump. Fagged from work or the excitement of the holidays, with the long, dark January days looming up forbiddingly, many will want to turn their backs on the hateful Winter and sail with us to the islands of the sun, so it is with pleasure that the Raymond & Whitcomb Company announce that it has arranged for January 3 next the first West Indies cruise since the United States entered the war. This cruise keeps you away for almost four weeks from the year's dreariest weather. During this leave of absence under bright skies you will see a hundred new sights each day, be warm and comfortable, and come back made over ready to meet again the demands of society or the routine of business.

AMERICAN TROPICS
For romantic interest and charm, nothing can compare with the gorgeous West Indies and the marvelous countries of the Caribbean, more "foreign" than abroad.
American Tropics will exercise upon you, as upon all travelers, their unusual charm, and should you have more time to spare after having seen the quaintness and wonder of the Spanish Main in Cuba, Jamaica, Panama, Costa Rica, Nassau and the Bahamas, you can leave the party in Havana and continue your vacation independently.
To assure membership in this cruise sailing January 3, it is urgent that you make arrangements early. There will be other cruises sailing from New York on February 14, March 6, March 13, April 3 and April 10, on specially chartered steamships—Calamares, Pastores, Ulua and Tolea.

CUBA
Havana, more Spanish than Madrid, with its vivid harbor, war-worn Castle and relics of Columbus. The Island Countryside, luxurious with tobacco and sugar estates and fantastic Royal Palms. Matanzas in the Yumuri Valley—"the Vale of Paradise." Santiago, a memorial of United States history.

JAMAICA
Half English, half tropic. Port Antonio and the North Coast Road in the midst of banana plantations and mango groves. Kingston, once headquarters for Pirates. The Eight Rivers and St. Ann's Bay—"The Garden Spot of the Indies." Spanish Town, the old island capital.

PANAMA
The Great Canal, the proudest engineering feat in the Western Hemisphere. Colon and Cristobal—Spanish America and United States side by side. The Gatun Dam, Culebra Cut and the Miraflores Locks. Panama City, the modern, and Panama City, the ancient, whose ruins tell of forays and buccaneers.

COSTA RICA
Port Limon, a great Caribbean port. San Jose, the capital, high in the Cordillera Mountains, "The Paris of Central America." The Jungle, a wilderness of ancient timber and flamboyant flowers, alive with monkeys and parrots.

NASSAU and the BAHAMAS
Nassau with its sponge fleets and old world gardens, its magnificent new hotels and its quaint streets. Grant's Town, a village of magic-practising black folk, whose ways date back to the time of Drake and the free-booters. The Island Forest with its profusion of strange trees and blossoms.

SECRET GERMAN QUERIES

Questions and Instructions for Spies Here and Abroad Fell in Hands of the Allies

NOT all the secret agents manoeuvred from the Wilhelmstrasse during the war were working solely for Germany. Some of them were on two pay rolls, and in reality were devoted to the allied cause. Thus Great Britain and France and the United States were well informed about what subjects especially interested Berlin, and what movements were the cause of exceptional worry. For the questionnaires sent out periodically to the German secret agents fell sooner or later into the hands of the Allies or the Americans.

Even at this late day these lists of instructions and questions are interesting. Especially is it illuminating to learn how solicitous the Germans were about hospital ships, in view of what they did to hospital ships whenever an opportunity arose. This, for instance, is taken from the secret questionnaire issued from Berlin in June, 1918, to all secret agents sent to the United States:

"Did you see any hospital ships? How were they painted? Were there any troops, munitions, or any other war material on board such ships?"

The italics are the Germans'. The last question in the paragraph was underscored in the secret orders. Other questions in that same list were as follows:

"What warships have you seen in the ports? (It is desired to know their names, their class, and their nationality.)

"Was there a great traffic of merchant ships? What were they carrying, what did they bring in, and from where did they come?

"Did you see any ship construction plants? What kind of ships were being constructed?

"Did you see any troops? How many? What kind? Number of regiments?

"Did you see any munition factories? Of what kind of munitions? Where were they situated?

"The prices of different foodstuffs?

"War preparation; what is thought of it?

"The entrance to ports; how are they watched? By what kind of ships? By aviators? Any mine fields? How are the entrances marked, buoyed, &c.? What instructions are given? How are the crews made up and what do they think of the submarines? How are they paid? What indemnity do they receive when they are torpedoed?

"Do ships always navigate with convoy, or do they travel at times alone? What route is followed? Where do they meet and how is their meeting place guarded?

"What signals are employed when traveling with convoy, and what formation is adopted at night?

"Are there any means of defense on board, apparatus for generating smoke, bombs, &c.?

"Did you hear of ships being torpedoed while traveling with convoy? When, where, tonnage and cargo of ships?

"Where are there any factories, construction plants, dry docks, and depots accessible from the sea?"

One may suppose that superiors in Berlin, reading their agents' reports about food and food prices in the United States, suffered certain inward qualms, not of conscience. But their chief concern was about shipping and the effect of the submarine warfare, and occasionally, in looking through a stack of these questionnaires, there leaps out a sharp inquiry as to the number of American troops in France.

"Does the submarine warfare make life conditions miserable in England?" was a hopeful inquiry of Aug. 27, 1917, and "What are the British measures against submarines?" Berlin asked on April 18, 1918. In August agents here were asked, "What is the feeling in mercantile circles about submarine war?"

These questions in different form were asked again and again, and the most minute information was besought regarding the defensive equipment of ships, the position of the hydrophone, the crews and appearance of the famous British "Hush-hush" boats, where they were built, and their speed, what guns the British U-boat chasers carried, the ports from which and to which transports from the United States sailed, and a multitude of other details. Reading these papers one marvels that America transported her 2,000,000 so safely to the other shore. Either Berlin could not get the information because the agents were stupid, or they couldn't get at the transports. For instance, on Dec. 2, 1917, a questionnaire was sent out containing these questions:

"What routes are taken by the American transports to Europe?"

"In which French ports have the American troops been landed up to the present?"

"How many troops have been landed there?"

"What is the composition of such troops? (fighting units, labor battalions)."

"In which French ports is the American war material landed?"

"Which French ports are being specially enlarged by the Americans?"

"From which French ports are railways being specially laid to the front?"

"What naval forces are used by the Americans for the guarding of their bases in France?

"Which are the American bases in England and Ireland?

"How many American troops are there in England?

"Where are these troops stationed?

"Are American troops being landed and trained in Portugal also?"

Again and again, in later documents, questions of similar import bobbed up. In regard to British naval affairs the German curiosity was even keener. Berlin wanted to know about the calibre of guns on specified ships, the Lion, the Orion, the King George, the Queen Elisabeth, the Furious, the Revenge, the Arethusa, the Calliope—the list might be prolonged almost indefinitely. And Berlin manifested an unhealthful curiosity, too, about the size, speed, armor, armament, and "side towers" (siete thurm) of such French warships as the Lamotte, the Piquet, the Namen. Berlin wanted to know how the destroyers worked in connection with balloons, what aircraft protection there was on British coasts, details of coast defense construction, mine fields and floating batteries for coastal attacks. Berlin seemed to have an insatiable curiosity. It is safe to say that it never was satiated.

The British secret service was another source of worry. Who, Berlin wanted to know, was in charge of that service in Bergen and Christiania, what British Vice Consuls were detailed to espionage work in Bergen, whom did they work with, what foreigners were being used, what German deserters were helping them, did the Norwegian police give their assistance, and did the British pay for such aid. The food conditions in Norway were another source of curiosity.

As to American troops, Berlin was specially anxious on Sept. 5, 1918, to know their location at the front.

"Is it long," the secret agents were asked, "since these divisions have been in rest?

"The names of the General officers commanding?

"Number of American troops in France?

"Particulars as to how American troops are used at the front?

"What has become of the French troops available owing to having been relieved by the Americans?

"What has become of the Russian troops in France?"

The foregoing questions were given to a German agent sent on a mission into France early in August, 1919, through Spain.

In June, 1918, Berlin became concerned about British military plans.

"Is the offensive intended?" agents were asked. "Where? Place and time? Source?

"English divisions in Italy?

"Will Italy be left to its own devices?

"The same concerning Salonica, Palestine, and Mesopotamia?

"How do the English mix a division with a French division?

"Foch's reserve army? Does it really exist? What does it consist of? Where is it now?

"Air attacks on Germany? What intentions? When and where?"

In the last question a certain nervousness makes itself manifest. In other questionnaires, Berlin asked for specific details about the effect of air raids on London, the loss of life, the damage to property, the effect on morale. If the answers to those questions ever reached the Wilhelmstrasse, and were truthful, they must have been disappointing, even disquieting.

"What" Berlin wanted to know in March, 1918, "are the relations of the United States with regard to the productive possibilities of the country? Tonnages, financial and material independence?" [Apparently this question was intended to probe the dependence of the Allies on us for supplies.] "What is the extent of the United States' credit [to Great Britain]? What advances have been made to the other allies?"

Many questions were asked about military movements and plans, about the British intentions toward Ostend and Zeebrugge, about the recruiting or conscription of new troops, about railroad traffic, about the number of batteries with each battalion and their location, about the calibre of British and French and American guns, about airplanes and tanks, the engines used in planes, their speed, the location of munition depots, troop encamonments, barracks, anything everything.

It must have been a gay life serving as secret agent for the Wilhelmstrasse!

TAXATION OF JEWELRY.

A fountain pen ornamented with precious metals or even a fountain pen containing a gold pen point is subject to the jewelry tax. The Bureau of Internal Revenue made this announcement recently because of complaints from jewelers that fountain pens, cigar and cigarette holders and other articles taxable under the Revenue act were being sold without collection and return of the tax.

The Revenue act imposes a tax of 3 per cent. on the selling price of jewelry, whether real or imitation, and on articles ornamented or fitted with precious metals or imitations thereof, wherever sold.

Such articles include cigar and cigarette cases, eyeglass cases, pencils, pens, garter buckles, purses and handbags, watches, clocks, opera glasses, marine glasses, lorgnettes and binoculars. This list is merely illustrative.

ONE LIQUOR SELLER TO JAIL

Bernard Gallant First to be So Penalized—Six Waiters at Village Inn Go Free

BERNARD GALLANT, sometime publicity man for the Mexican Government, later manager of the Greenwich Village Theatre, and now manager of the Greenwich Village Inn in Sheridan Square, is the first man in New York to go to jail on a charge of selling intoxicants.

Just now Gallant is at large. Judge Learned Hand of the Federal Court has given him seven days of liberty to attend to business affairs, but he expects to return next Tuesday to the Tombs to complete a twenty-day sentence, reduced to that length by Judge Hand from thirty days.

In the village the chief point of interest about this situation lies not in the fact that Gallant was the first man so penalized, but in the fact that he went to jail in order that six of his waiters might go free. For six of them were arrested when Gallant was taken in a raid on the restaurant; and it was considered almost an open-and-shut case against at least three of them. The evidence against Gallant, since he had served no liquor personally, was much more tenuous. But he agreed to plead guilty on condition that the cases against the waiters be dismissed. And it was so ordered.

After all Gallant couldn't well do otherwise for before he became a capitalist, or, rather, a representative of capitalists, he was radical. His friends say he is still a Radical (and indicate that the word properly begins with a capital letter.) Anyhow, he had made the statement often that when offenses against the law were committed by the direction of an employer, it was a gross injustice that the employe should suffer, and not the "man higher up." This is a theme, as any one can see, which opens limitless opportunities for rapid and eloquent denunciation, and for an ardent championship of the downtrodden proletariat.

And suddenly Gallant, who had dilated so frequently on that text, found himself in the embarrassing position of the "man higher up." He was the employer, not the employed.

Better men than Gallant have done an abrupt about-face in such circumstances, but not he! He would make good. He would live up to his Radicalism. He would set an example to other employers, to other offenders, to other capitalists. He would go to jail.

But Gallant had been in the Tombs only four days, having a high-old time buying cigarettes and chocolate and food for the other prisoners, so the attendants say, when his case was reopened. Men who had known him before he became a lawbreaker, or was accused of such a thing, interceded in his behalf, and for a second time he was arraigned before Judge Hand.

"May it please the court," complained Joseph Mulqueen, Jr., who prosecuted the case, "since this man was convicted I have had not a moment's peace nor pleasure. I have been besieged with pleas to let this man go. Even a police captain and a priest have come to me. But I am unalterably opposed to leniency in this case."

That, or words to that effect, expressed Mr. Mulqueen's position. Gallant's lawyer had his say, and then Gallant himself asked permission to address the court. He explained that he had entered his plea in order that his waiters, who could ill afford a jail sentence, might not be forced into idleness, and that he thought he ought to pay the full penalty of the law.

That was how it happened that Judge Hand gave Gallant a ten days' reprieve, with the understanding that he should return to the Tombs and serve sixteen days more. And that was why, until the lid was clamped firmly onto the town last Wednesday, only beer and light wines were served at the Greenwich Village Inn, although at nearly any saloon and at many restaurants those who were known could obtain all the whisky they wanted, or something masquerading as whisky. Even while Gallant was "languishing" in jail, (and making warm admirers of his fellow prisoners by his liberality in the matter of cigarettes,) his employes at the inn decided that they would take no further chances, and the sale of "hard" drinks ceased.

To Villagers, and to that uptown contingent which finds a form of amusement in looking over the short-haired and long-haired women and men who are supposed to constitute the bohemians of that quarter, the Sheridan Square drought came as a calamity, and the sentence imposed on Gallant as a final example of justice miscarried. As for Gallant, he declines to discuss it for publication. The record speaks for itself.

Choirs to Return to Rome.

The visit of the Vatican Choirs, in America since last September, will end on Tuesday night, Dec. 2, at the Metropolitan Opera House in this city, and on the following day the Roman singers will sail for home in order to be back there in time for Christmas services in the churches with which they are identified.

This picture shows the complete set of the new Eleventh Edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica in the tremendously popular Handy Volume issue printed on genuine India paper. The twenty-nine volumes contain 44,000,000 words, 30,000 pages, and are the work of 1,500 recognized authorities from every civilized country in the world. While this set contains a great wealth of information on every subject known to the human mind, the entire twenty-nine volumes, because they are printed on the wonderfully light, thin but opaque India paper, occupy only 31 inches of shelf room, and each volume, which is no larger than the ordinary magazine, may be held with comfort by the reader for hours at a time.

NOW AS NEVER BEFORE YOU NEED THE ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA

There probably is not a man, woman or child among the 100,000,000 inhabitants of the United States upon whom the past five years has not had a profound effect. Great reforms have been hastened and this will be a better and cleaner world after the ordeals of fire through which it has passed. The participation of the United States as never before in the world's affairs has brought to the people new interests not limited to the neighborhood, town or city in which they live, but interests that are world-wide. A miracle has been wrought in men's minds, a miracle in which there is a tremendous thirst for knowledge, a knowledge which is absolutely necessary today, as never before. Where can people find correct, authoritative and comprehensive information on the many different subjects in which they are interested as a consequence of this awakening? They naturally turn to the wonderful storehouse of knowledge—the world's greatest guide to correct and authoritative information—the Encyclopaedia Britannica. The Britannica describes the peoples of the world, the countries, industrially, politically and socially. The Britannica furnishes practical, detailed and authoritative articles of great value to the manufacturer, to the importer, to the worker in the industries. The Britannica will give a foundation for study of subjects which will be uppermost in our minds for years to come. The Britannica is the great work of useful information. It is the book for Americans today who are waking up to new thoughts, new work and new interests.

Are We Going to Take Full Advantage of Our Industrial Opportunities?

During the past few years the business of this nation has tremendously expanded. Industries have had to enlarge their plants many times their normal size. Entire new towns, great ship-building yards and large industrial plants have sprung up almost over night. So great has been the pressure to produce tremendous quantities of materials in the shortest length of time that, out of necessity, efficiency has been the watchword of the day. Great progress has been made in shop management. There have been many inventions. Many short cuts have been found for a better and quicker production of material. Today marks the period of the greatest industrial development in this country. How are we going to make use of this tremendous impetus given to our industries? Are we going to carry them to a greater development or are we going to drop back into the old rut as before the war? This latter would be disastrous. On the employer and the worker in these industries fall the responsibility to adjust our business so as to safeguard our industrial welfare. The employer and the worker in these industries must grasp, assimilate and apply the principles of greater efficiency to their plants and keep their own industries abreast of these rapidly changing conditions. The Britannica is a working manual, dealing with every subject which the employer, the employee or any other man can think of and will speed them up mentally and make them alert to the tremendous opportunities of today.

A Complete Library of Knowledge

But this marvelous work, with its 41,000 separate articles, is more than a guide for the enterprising business man of the United States, fitting him to be a citizen of the world—a world merchant. The Britannica is a complete library of knowledge on every subject. It discusses in a way that you can understand every branch of science, industry, literature, art, religion, inventions and engineering; history and race development; wars and peace; architecture, astronomy, chemistry, sociology, education, steam, electricity, geology and geography, biography, law and physics. You and your family will find in the Britannica a liberal education. In answer to the hundred questions which every day come to your mind and to your wife's and children's minds—it will tell you more about everything than you can get from any other source.

What Is Before Us?

There are many serious post-war problems confronting us. Do you understand the tendencies in our industrial life? Why are the prices of commodities high? Will wages go still higher? Will the cost of living gradually drop? Is there likely to be some great cataclysm that will serve to send prices and wages downward? Has there been a general social unrest after other great wars? Are you inclined to be stampeded with fear of what is before us? Are you sitting down and studying the facts of past cases that were somewhat similar? Are you familiar with what has happened after other wars? In England after the Napoleonic campaigns; in the United States after the Civil War; to France, to Germany and to Neutrals after the Franco-Prussian war?

This war has blazed a way for America to commercial supremacy. MIGHTY ELEVENS OF DARTMOUTH AND COLGATE WAGE DRAWN BATTLE ON GRIDIRON AT HANOVER

YOUNGSTROM SAVES GAME FOR GREEN

Blocked Punt in Last Minute of Play Enables Dartmouth to Tie Colgate, 7 to 7.

BOTH FIGHT DESPERATELY

Visitors Score Early, but Hanoverians Stage a Magnificent Eleventh-Hour Rally.

GILLO AND WEST SHINE

Steady Battering of Line Has Victory All but Won Until Green Makes Its Dramatic Comeback.

Special to The New York Times.

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 1.—The towering, mud-smeared figure of Swede Youngstrom, Dartmouth's right guard, loomed up in heroic proportions in the last minute of today's game with Colgate. He saved the big Green eleven from defeat by blocking Webster's punt, to pick up the ball and rush over the Maroon goal line with the touchdown, which ended one of the most desperately fought football games of the year, by a score of 7 to 7.

Until close to the end of the fourth quarter, Dartmouth was a defeated team. Hank Gillo and Bel West, the Colgate captain, had accomplished almost superhuman achievements in battering and smashing the Dartmouth line. Colgate had scored in the first period, and several times after that was on the verge of scoring again.

In the final period, when Dartmouth's chances looked more gloomy, the Green eleven awoke with startling suddenness and started to fight back Colgate with such desperation that the bruising punishment sapped Colgate's spirit and stamina. Dartmouth's magnificent eleventh-hour rally had Colgate staggering.

There were less than 60 seconds of the game left to play when Webster, Colgate's half back, dropped back to punt and put his team beyond danger's reach. Dusk was gathering through the New Hampshire hills and the Dartmouth crowd, keyed up to a point of desperation, yelled "block that kick." The ball was passed back to Webster as he stood on his 10-yard line. Through the mass of players the heavy figure of Youngstrom broke. His face was covered with mud. Colgate players got in his path and they were bowled over like tenpins. The giant Swede galloped on toward Webster, brushing the Colgate players aside by the fury of his drive.

A Dramatic Climax.

With arms waving above his head, Youngstrom leaped into Webster with a mighty jump. The ball boomed against Youngstrom's chest and bounded on to the muddy field. Youngstrom thrust Webster aside and sent him sprawling. He was on top of the ball in a jiffy. Others piled on and with half a dozen Colgate players clinging to him, dragged them all over the goal line, and lighted the spark which exploded the greatest outbreak of joyous abandon that has ever been witnessed on Alumni Oval.

The Dartmouth student body became hysterical. Although Dartmouth still had to kick a goal to tie the Colgate score, they didn't give that a moment's thought. Out of the shallow wooden stands they rushed on to the field and the warcry of ancient Indian days echoed over the country side.

"Wah Hoo Wah" filled the air and the students dragged their dignified parents out of their seats and made them dance around the field with them. When the officials finally cleared the field Robertson came forth to kick the all important goal, which would mean a tie game for the Dartmouth team. Robertson first wiped all the mud from his shoes. The ball was slippery and the footing was muddy and uncertain. The Dartmouth kicker booted the wet, heavy ball toward the goal posts and it struck the uprights with such force that the posts shook like a sapling in a strong wind. The ball bounded away from the post and, bounced over the bars.

Dartmouth's Splendid Courage.

Dartmouth couldn't have been more overjoyed if the Green had won the game. While they didn't win, they displayed as game and courageous a spirit in the face of great odds as has ever been displayed by a Dartmouth eleven. The splendid fight and dash of that last few minutes of play, that undeniable confidence in their own power, the never-say-die enthusiasm which sent them battering into the strong Colgate eleven was a splendid thing to watch. The old grads who flocked here today were proud of these boys. Their great uphill fight stirred up emotions in the breasts of Dartmouth men which had been undisturbed for years.

Gameness and stamina gave Dartmouth its tie with the ambitious Colgate eleven. The Green players took a gruelling pounding from the Colgate battering ram, Hank Gillo and Laird, for three periods.

Gillo pounded the Dartmouth line until it seemed as if it had gone beyond the limit of human endurance. Time after time on a crash-buck play off tackle Gillo plowed and plunged his way through the Dartmouth players. West and Wooster, the Colgate tackles, opened the way for him, and these two Colgate players did Trojan work. West, battered and bruised, his nose bleeding, and most of the time his eyes and mouth filled with mud—what a figure he was! His great frame broke through time and again and stopped the Dartmouth plays. He was through and down the field far ahead of his mates on kicks. Everywhere that the battle raged fiercest the leather-covered head and blood-stained face of West stood out like the helmet of Navarre.

An Almost Impossible Feat.

In the end of this seething, desperate game, however, it was Dartmouth that showed that she could take the hardest beating. When the game looked lost to most of the spectators, Dartmouth brought her dormant resources into play. They fought back the Maroon with even more fury than Colgate had shown in the early stages of the game. The onslaught which Dartmouth turned loose in the last few minutes of play swept the tiring Colgate players aside. West, Wooster and Woodman were crushed under the drives of the Dartmouth backs.

At the moment when the Colgate line was called upon to display its greatest defense, the forwards, close to exhaustion, almost collapsed as Dartmouth achieved an almost impossible feat, and did the one and only thing possible to tie the score before the whistle blew.

It was a crushing, stunning blow to Colgate. With visions of an All-Eastern title, Larry Bankart's eleven went at Dartmouth with a spirit of confidence. They outplayed the Green easily in the first two periods and Dartmouth was unable to get her double-shift play working with any degree of success against the stubborn Colgate line.

Bankart Stays Away.

Bankart was not present to see victory snapped from his remarkable eleven in the last minute of play. Bankart is a Dartmouth man, and perhaps he didn't want to come here to see an eleven which he coached defeat his Alma Mater. It was said he stayed behind to go to Providence to look over the Syracuse eleven, which Colgate plays next week. Although Bankart wasn't there, the Dartmouth students gave him a cheer and showed that there were no hard feelings.

A stretch of fourteen years has passed since Colgate came here and beat the Green in 1905. The renewal of gridiron relations brought Dartmouth men from far and near. Last night the Colgate men were betting 5 to 4 that Colgate would win. All the money was snatched up. Over Hanover today, when the old grads flocked in, there was a feeling of confidence that Dartmouth was going to spring a surprise, and this feeling became so strong that the betting first went to even money, and at noon enthusiastic Dartmouth men were betting 5 to 4 on the Green.

It is a far cry from the big university stadiums to the small wooden stands which surround Alumni Oval. These wooden stands were jammed and the spectators were brought so close to the gridiron that it was almost possible to reach out and touch the players. The rain left a big puddle on the gridiron, and after the players had been on the field three minutes, the turf was mixed up into a sticky mud. The field was in deplorable condition and the surprising thing is that the elevens were able to play as well as they did in the mud.

It was a sorry looking squad of football players which trooped off the field at the end of the game. No mother could have recognized her son in that mud-soaked mob of tired athletes. It was a hard, gruelling game and there wasn't a player who had much left when the battle ended.

Colgate Springs a Surprise.

Colgate had a big surprise in store for Dartmouth after Cuddy Murphy kicked off to Gillo. The Maroon opened up an attack through the Dartmouth tackles which sent the Dartmouth forwards scattering. Gillo furnished most of the motive power for Colgate. First he shot through one side of the line and then through the other. Laird alternated with him before Dartmouth woke up to what was happening. Colgate by straight rushing had pushed Dartmouth back forty yards.

When Colgate had carried the ball from her own 30-yard line to Dartmouth's 30, Dartmouth pulled itself together and Anderson gave up the hammering tactics and tried a forward pass. This failed, and Laird kicked over the Dartmouth goal line.

Robertson punted on the first down to Colgate's 45-yard line and again Gillo began to rip enormous holes in the Dartmouth line. The terrific battering could not last forever, and Anderson tried another forward pass, which failed. Laird then punted to Dartmouth's 10-yard line and, just as soon as the players lined up, Robertson dropped back to kick.

The slippery wet ball glanced off the punter's muddy shoe, and the Dartmouth students groaned when the miserable punt hopped out of bounds on the 22-yard mark. This break gave Colgate just the chance she was looking for. It was exactly the same kind of a play which happened when Colgate beat Brown, and only last week when the Maroon defeated Princeton.

Gillo and Laird again began their relentless charges through the Green forwards. Dartmouth seemed unable to stop Gillo. No matter how many men tackled him he was always able to slip forward a few more yards.

Forward Pass Scores.

This rip-snorting attack of Gillo and Laird brought the ball down to Dartmouth's 10-yard line, and then Anderson chucked a forward pass to Gillo as he stood near the goal line, and he stood near the goal line, and he tumbled over for a touchdown. West kicked the goal.

Once or twice in that period Dartmouth got started. The shift formation, with Holbrook, Robertson, and Jordan carrying the ball, netted substantial gains, but the Colgate line was so powerful that these gains were not sustained for any length of time. When Dartmouth's end plays worked they were pretty plays to watch. Holbrook and Robertson and Cannel hung close to a compact interference, and the Colgate tacklers had to tumble over three men before they finally reached the man with the ball. Colgate diagnosed this play so well that it was smeared after it had been used several times in succession.

Dartmouth made no attempt to score in the second period, when Robertson tried a field goal from the 40-yard line. The wet ball refused to leave the ground and Dartmouth's hopes died with the failure of the kick.

Forwards Worry Laird.

These hopes revived in the third period when Dartmouth began to show improvement and broke through on Laird and blocked his punts. The Dartmouth forwards charged with such fury that they swept the Colgate line aside and made Laird's attempts to punt more and more dangerous. Jordan and Cannell made runs of twelve and fifteen yards in this period, but couldn't get within striking distance of Colgate's goal line.

Dartmouth came to life in the fourth period and Colgate showed signs of tiring. One blocked punt of Laird's proved lucky for Colgate, for, after the Dartmouth forwards had charged through and blocked the kick, Anderson picked it up and ran thirty yards before he was brought to earth. After this run, West tried to kick a goal from placement from the 20-yard line, but the ball went wide.

The last few minutes of the game were bubbling with excitement. When it was announced that there were only five minutes to play, Dartmouth woke up to the seriousness of her plight. Cannell and Jordon ripped off thrilling dashes around Colgate's wings and they brought the ball from their own 20-yard mark far into Colgate's territory. Jordan's green jersey was torn from his back during the mad scrimmage and the game stopped a moment while he put on a new one. Cannell, Jordan and Robertson carried the ball steadily down until it was on Colgate's 28-yard line. The crowd yelled madly for a touchdown.

Robertson threw a forward pass which Merritt caught on the 16-yard line and then tried another, which failed. The Dartmouth backs were unable to get around the ends, and, after another futile attempt to throw a forward pass, Dartmouth lost the ball on downs and it seemed right then and there as if Dartmouth's chances were gone forever.

Taking the ball on their own 16-yard line Gillo, and Webster, who had taken Laird's place, began to peel off gains and twice Colgate was set back for offside play and Webster was forced to drop back to kick. It was while he was attempting to get out of danger that big Youngstrom broke through, blocked his kick, picked up the ball and crossed the goal line with the score which saved Dartmouth from disastrous defeat.

LAFAYETTE GIVES CORNELL A BEATING

Scores Three Touchdowns Against Ithacans and Wins, 21 to 2—Weldon the Hero.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Lafayette gave Cornell its third successive defeat in as many weeks this afternoon, winning by the score of 21 to 2 on a muddy field and in the midst of a steady downpour. The Easonians outjumped the Ithacans at the outset, a long run by Weldon paving the way for a touchdown, which Hauser scored in the first two minutes of play. After that the Ithacans braced and scored a safety and the rest of the half was evenly fought.

In the second half the Eastonians gave convincing evidence of their superiority, scoring a touchdown in the third period by sixty-five yards of rushing, and another in the final period after Weldon had circled right end for a twenty-five-yard run that put his team in position for another drive for a score.

The visitors knew more football than Cornell and played better football. Their backs outweighed the Red eleven's substitute backfield, which was forced to carry the brunt of this game, because the regulars are in poor shape, and this advantage in weight counted heavily in a soggy field. They got off on their toes and as they lunged forward gained in momentum and power until they bowled over Cornell tacklers and fought their way for good gains through the line and outside of tackle.

Lafayette used a quick shift that baffled the Ithacans. At least, they were able to cope with it only occasionally. Another play that proved damaging was a rush about the ends, Weldon carrying the ball, with three men in the interference. The Cornell forwards, ends and half backs could not break through the runner's defense, and most of Weldon's biggest gains were made behind such a formation.

Strangely enough, the Ithacans played a better offensive game than at any time this year. The sub backs formed a real interference, and made substantial gains by off-tackle plays, though they lacked the punch to carry the drive through to success. They made a twenty-yard drive in the first period, a thirty-yard advance in the second, and in the fourth, against the substitute Lafayette team, made forty yards by rushing, failing each time, however, to cross the goal line.

Lafayette launched a thunderbolt at the outset. Weldon caught Shiverick's kickoff on his 10-yard line and raced at lightning speed down the field until Shiverick nailed him on the Cornell 45-yard line. Engel, Lehecka, and Weldon took the ball to Cornell's 14-yard line, where Hauser circled left end for a touchdown, and Weldon kicked goal. On the next kickoff the Ithacans solved the Lafayette attack for the time being and forced Weldon to punt. Cornell then launched an attack, Shiverick, Livingston, and Craig making eighteen yards off tackle before they were held.

Opening the second period, Shiverick tried for goal from the field from his 40-yard line. The kick was short and the ball bounded to Weldon as it was crossing the goal line. He muffed it, but recovered, and Pendleton tackled him for a safety. The rest of this half was evenly fought.

Opening the third period with a rush, Lafayette crashed down the field from its own 35-yard line for a touchdown, using a line attack most of the time. Cornell held well on her 2-yard line, but, on fourth down, Weldon went through for a score. In the last period Weldon duplicated this feat after bringing the ball within striking distance by a 25-yard run.

WESLEYAN BEATS WILLIAMS EASILY

Purple Weakens in Final Half—Boote & Boot Is a Decisive Factor in Game.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Nov. 1.—With Captain Homan and Boote both playing smashing games, the one in the line and runs and spectacular to the line, and the other good toe, Wesleyan won from Williams, 16 to 0, on Andrus Field this afternoon. In the first quarter the visitors made an aggressive attack, spurred on by the spectacular work of Captain Boynton, but on a touchdown by the Berkshire eleven on a forward pass from Oyton to Beckitt was not allowed.

From then on, Wesleyan fought pluckily, and at no time during the remainder of the game was the Wesleyan goal line in serious danger. For two periods this season, periods each other, with neither scoring much of an advantage. In the third period, Wesleyan worked the ball to Williams' 30-yard line, where, from a difficult angle, Boote kicked a field goal that set the bleachers wild. Five minutes later he repeated the feat from the 40-yard line, also from a comparable angle.

In the last period Captain Harman, Webb, worked the ball down, and Harman plunged through the disheartened Williams line for the goal. Later Boote kicked another field goal between the posts from the twenty-two yard line.

Boote's record as a point-after-touchdown kicker and Harman's work at fullback today seems to mark him as one of the best drop-kickers and punters in the country. Captain Boynton was somewhat of a disappointment from a playing standpoint, but his judgment at directing the first quarter was perfect, and on the wings Williams and Boote were conspicuous.

TIGER CUBS DEFEAT YALE.

Bulldog Freshmen Lose Annual Football Game by Score of 22 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 1.—The Princeton freshman team defeated the Yale Cub eleven here in a poorly played game on University Field this afternoon by a score of 22-0. Fumbling was frequent on both sides, and the sloppy condition of the field, coupled with the rain, made the ball extremely hard to handle.

Enwer of the Tiger Cubs, was the star of the game, scoring two of the three touchdowns and making several sensational runs.

Princeton had four opportunities to score drop-kicks in the first quarter, but took advantage of only one of them, when Captain Holmes booted the leather over the crossbars. Yale held the Tigers scoreless from that time until the last quarter, when two long runs by Enwer scored two touchdowns and Dixon carried the ball over for the third.

PENN STATE DOWNS U. P. ELEVEN, 10-0

Quakers' Hopes of a Championship Drowned in Sea of Mud on Franklin Field.

FUMBLE LEADS TO SCORE

Conover Recovers Ball on Philadelphians' Two-Yard Line and Robb Makes Touchdown.

FORMER ADDS FIELD GOAL

Makes Pretty Kick from Placement—Pennsylvania Misses Many Good Chances of Counting.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 1.—The University of Pennsylvania's aspirations for a football championship were drowned this afternoon in a sea of mud and rain on Franklin Field, when Penn State's fighting eleven literally slipped over an unexpected victory by the score of 10 to 0. Harry Robb, former star of the Columbia S. A. T. C. team, scored the only touchdown of the game, after a fumbled kick had given Berdek's veterans the ball on Pennsylvania's 2-yard line, and Cubbage kicked the goal.

In the final period of play Conover gave the State College team an additional three points with a field goal from placement, kicked from the 25-yard line.

Although the miserable weather conditions made good football practically impossible, the battle was fought on even terms throughout, Penn State growing gradually stronger as her players realized Pennsylvania's inability to make use of the open game for which this season's high-scoring eleven was famous, and more than holding her own in the line-plunging which eventually proved the only method of consistent advance.

On statistics there was little to choose between the contestants. Each team made a total of six first downs by rushing, five of State's successes coming in the second half. Pennsylvania tried eleven forward passes, only three of which were legally completed. In five attempts of the same kind Penn State was successful twice, and her gains by the aerial route were the longer.

State Has Punting Advantage.

In punting, also, the State Collegians had the advantage, averaging at least ten yards more on ten kicks by Higgins than Bruner and Captain Bell could register in eleven. There were no long runs, the limit of a single gain being about twenty-five yards. State suffered by half a dozen penalties, two of which were for delaying the game, while Pennsylvania was twice set back by Referee Maxwell.

Inability to handle the slippery oval was primarily responsible for the defeat of the Philadelphians, although there were times when good headwork might have saved the desperate situation. The Red and Blue certainly looked like the stronger team at the start, and even when trailing on the wrong end of a 7-0 score at half time gave little indication of being in for defeat. While open football was still a possibility, it was shelved in favor of a straight, line-smashing attack, and when the rain came down more and more heavily every hope of scoring by a forward pass or a trick play vanished.

Penn State had a line which could not be pierced and possessed just enough punch in the back field to put the ball over when the one golden opportunity came. It took four rushes to cover the two yards necessary for a touchdown. Pennsylvania fighting magnificently on her goal line, but failing to stop Robb's final catapulting smash outside right tackle.

State's second score came after a series of steady gains, including a fine forward pass from Robb to Higgins which netted 20 yards. There was nothing fluky about Conover's place kick, which sailed straight over the middle of the crossbars. Penn State's well earned three points fairly represented the winner's actual margin of superiority.

The curious thing about this Penn State football team is that it has so much veteran material available that the picking of the eleven is a difficult and delicate task. Each individual player is so convinced of his fitness for a particular position that he is ready to play his head off in practice to prove it. The result is that Hastings suffered an astonishing number of injuries in the daily scrimmages. Last Tuesday was the climax, and several stars were lost to the team through their determination to win a place in today's game. It was even rumored that practically the whole eleven came to Philadelphia in a more or less crippled condition. But their playing showed no such weakness, and they proved themselves far better mud horses than their university rivals.

Higgins Stars for Visitors.

Out of the grim struggle which marked the resumption of football relations between the two Pennsylvania institutions, several names already renowned on the gridiron emerged again with honor. Higgins, Penn State's All-American end, more than lived up to his reputation, in spite of every imaginable handicap. He did all the kicking for his team and not once did he fail to achieve both height and distance. He was a power on defense, and proved himself the only man on the field able to pick a forward pass unerringly out of the semi-darkness and the rain. Robb showed skill in throwing the slippery ball to Higgins, and was the most consistent ground-gainer in the State backfield. His plunge for a touchdown was a mighty effort, against an apparently impregnable defense, and on the fourth down.

Little Way, the lightest man on either team, produced some surprising speed at times, particularly in his running back of kicks. In the line, Conover was the hero. In addition to his goal from the field, he was indirectly responsible for State's touchdown by recovering the loose ball which had been fumbled three times on its way to the goal line. Cubbage, Rauch and Snell were also valuable to their team.

For the losers, Hobey Light was the hardest worker, making some good runs early in the contest, and doing his share of the forward passing and defensive work. Pearce, who substituted in the Pennsylvania backfield, flashed more speed than any of the regulars and his run-back of the kick-off in the second half was a spectacular effort. Captain Bell was a disappointment, particularly in the matter of punting, and Bruner offered some good [illegible]

PITT BEATS LEHIGH AS DARKNESS FALLS

Two Touchdowns By Tom Davies Late in Final Period Bring Victory, 14 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

BETHLEHEM, Penn., Nov. 1.—Tom Davies proved Pitt's guiding star today in a titanic struggle with Lehigh, both touchdowns scored by the Panthers being credited to him. The final score was 14 to 0. Hastings kicked both goals. These scores came in the gloaming, for it was as the twilight was fast giving away to darkness in the final minutes of the fourth period that this fleet-footed player got away first for a 50-yard run through the entire Lehigh team and then a few moments later intercepted one of Herrington's forward passes and dashed 40 yards, again sliding over the goal line. The fierce contest was played on a muddy field and through a drizzle.

For three periods it was a struggle such as has seldom been seen on a Lehigh field. Both teams had several chances to score. Once a fumble prevented Pitt from scoring and then two attempts at placements also failed. On one other time Lehigh, by a wonderful display of strength, held the Pittsburghers on the one-yard line.

On the other hand, Lehigh had opportunities to score, twice from drop kicks, but the wet ball prevented accuracy. Once Lehigh on two plays took the ball down the field to within striking distance of the goal, but Eddie Booth was caught roughing a Pitt player and the chance to score was lost. Statistics of the game point to the fact that Lehigh made 480 yards on punts to 420 for Pitt. Herrington punted for Lehigh and Hastings for Pitt. The visitors had 10 first downs to 6 for Lehigh. Pitt was decidedly the stronger in rushing the ball, making 194 yards from scrimmage while Lehigh only made 50. Lehigh resorted mostly to a punting or forward pass game. In this respect Lehigh easily led, having eight that were successful and six that were grounded, besides the one that was intercepted, which resulted in a score for Pitt. Lehigh made seventy-five yards on her forward passes; three of Pitt's forward passes were grounded and two worked. In penalties Lehigh was the greater sufferer, losing fifty yards to thirty-five for Pitt.

The game started with an exchange of punts, and after a few minutes Pitt was in possession of the ball on Lehigh's 40-yard line. From here the Pittsburghers started down the field, making three first downs and, aided by a forward pass, the ball rested on Lehigh's 10-yard line. On the next play Hastings fumbled but recovered and suffered a 10-yard loss, and another forward pass failed. At the start of the second period Pitt tried for a placement from the 45-yard line, but the ball went wide.

Then came Lehigh's turn. With the ball in her possession on the 20-yard line Wysocki broke through for 33 yards on a fake play and Herrington followed with a pretty forward pass to Liston for 30 yards. The latter fumbled when tackled but Booth recovered on Pitt's 10-yard line. Wysocki lost 10 yards on the next play and Herrington dropped back for a drop kick, but the wet ball went wide.

Pitt started off with vigor the third period and Hastings and Davies took the ball to Lehigh's 32-yard line. After a series of injuries in the daily scrimmages. Last Tuesday was the climax, and several stars were lost to the team through their determination to win a place in today's game. It was even rumored that practically the whole eleven came to Philadelphia in a more or less crippled condition. But their playing showed no such weakness, and they proved themselves far better mud horses than their university rivals.

Higgins Stars for Visitors.

Out of the grim struggle which marked the resumption of football relations between the two Pennsylvania institutions, several names already renowned on the gridiron emerged again with honor. Higgins, Penn State's All-American end, more than lived up to his reputation, in spite of every imaginable handicap. He did all the kicking for his team and not once did he fail to achieve both height and distance. He was a power on defense, and proved himself the only man on the field able to pick a forward pass unerringly out of the semi-darkness and the rain. Robb showed skill in throwing the slippery ball to Higgins, and was the most consistent ground-gainer in the State backfield. His plunge for a touchdown was a mighty effort, against an apparently impregnable defense, and on the fourth down.

Little Way, the lightest man on either team, produced some surprising speed at times, particularly in his running back of kicks. In the line, Conover was the hero. In addition to his goal from the field, he was indirectly responsible for State's touchdown by recovering the loose ball which had been fumbled three times on its way to the goal line. Cubbage, Rauch and Snell were also valuable to their team.

For the losers, Hobey Light was the hardest worker, making some good runs early in the contest, and doing his share of the forward passing and defensive work. Pearce, who substituted in the Pennsylvania backfield, flashed more speed than any of the regulars and his run-back of the kick-off in the second half was a spectacular effort. Captain Bell was a disappointment, particularly in the matter of punting, and Bruner offered some good [illegible]

SWARTHMORE WINS, 13-12.

Defeats Ursinus by One Point In Hard-Fought Football Battle.

Special to The New York Times.

SWARTHMORE, Penn., Nov. 1.—The narrow margin of one point separated the scores of Swarthmore and Ursinus this afternoon, after a hard battle in the mud. Swarthmore won by a score of 13 to 12. The steady rain during the game and the darkness made the ball almost indistinguishable and caused the game to change from what at first seemed to be a walkover for the little Quakers into a hard fought battle of straight football, replete with fumbles, with the Collegeville lads holding their heavier opponents even during the last half.

On the first kick-off, Yarnall took the ball and made two 15-yard gains in succession. Geiges then zigzagged forty yards through the Ursinus team for the first Garnet touchdown. The second score came five minutes later, when, after an exchange of kicks, Yarnall, Geiges and White in succession ripped big holes in the Ursinus line. Then, on a fourth down, with eight yards to go, Carter hurled a long forward pass to Yarnall over the goal line. On the second play after the following kick-off, White got away for a 50-yard run in a clear field.

The second period began with the ball on Ursinus's 15-yard line. There, on Yarnall's fumble of the slippery ball, Vosburg picked up the oval and ran the length of the field for the first Ursinus six-pointer. The second score for the visitors came in the third period, when Richards picked up another fumble and raced thirty yards to the goal line. The lineup:

Flushing High Defeats Webb.

Flushing High School's football team added Webb Academy to its list of victims yesterday when the Long Islanders downed the Webb lads on the Flushing gridiron by a score of 20 to 0. The contest was played in a steady drizzle which made the field a slippery morass and drenched the pigskin, causing many fumbles. Halleck and Bloecker were the big guns in the Flushing success, Halleck crossing the Webb line twice while Bloecker accomplished the feat once. Burns kicked both goals.

TIGERS HUMBLED BY WEST VIRGINIA

Defeat Worse Than That Given by Colgate, Mountaineers Winning, 25 to 0.

FORWARD PASS BAFFLING

Long Heaves Precede the Three Touchdowns in First Period—Scheerer is Princeton Star.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 1.—For the second time in two consecutive Saturdays a Princeton football team has been forced to acknowledge defeat in a preliminary game. It was West Virginia's team of husky mountaineers that administered the second bitter dose of the season to this year's Tiger 'Varsity, and this time the score was so decisive that not a shadow of doubt remained as to which was the better team. The visitors amassed a total of four touchdowns and one goal from touchdown for a total of 25 points, meanwhile holding the Tigers scoreless.

The word preliminary is used advisedly. All games on the Princeton schedule until the final contests with Harvard and Yale are so styled, because they are preliminary to those games, but the battles which have been staged here between Princeton and Colgate last Saturday, and between Princeton and West Virginia today, have served to indicate that the old order is giving place to a new.

The game was played in a driving, penetrating drizzle, and the atmosphere was so humid and sticky that time out had to be called frequently to give the players a chance to get their breath. The water-soaked ball and the spongy turf slowed up the game considerably, and the back-field men, on Princeton especially, had a hard time trying to maintain their equilibrium. Both Captains, Rodgers of the visitors and McGraw of the Tigers, were forced out of the game by injuries in the second period. It was thought for a time that Rodgers's injury was of a serious nature. Doctors worked on his head, however, and in the final frame he returned to his place at full back.

Mountaineers Far Superior.

The players from the Blue Ridge excelled the Orange and Black eleven in everything except punting. Joe Scheerer's work for Princeton in this department was brilliant and was the outstanding feature of Princeton's play. Scheerer, who had not been called on before this season, went in for Destepano in the second period, and from that time his toe repeatedly punted the Tigers out of tight situations. The heavy ball was too much for King, and he could not send his spirals over a distance even approximating Scheerer's sixty and sixty-five yard drives.

The result of the game was a foregone conclusion after the first quarter. The Mountaineers started off with a rush in this period and were never headed. The visiting quarter back launched the forward passing attack, which proved successful all afternoon, early in the first period.

Parisette kicked off and on the first play a pass netted the Blue and Gold nineteen yards. Another brought five more and then Rodgers tore through and made it first down on Princeton's six-yard line. Line plunging was then resorted to and in three plays Hite and Rodgers made the required distance, the captain carrying the ball across the line after only two minutes of play.

It was Rodgers and forward passing again that accounted for the second tally a few minutes later. Princeton elected to receive the ball on the kickoff, but the attack failed and Wittmer punted to the visitors' 44-yard mark. Rodgers got off around end for twenty yards and two plays thereafter annexed another twenty around left end. With the ball twenty yards from Princeton's goal line, the visiting leader tossed a forward pass to King, who galloped over for a touchdown. Rodgers kicked the goal, his only successful attempt of the afternoon.

Baffled by Forward Passes.

The Tigers received the kickoff again and again Wittmer was called on to punt. Princeton was totally unable to fathom the aerial attack of the West Virginians. Rodgers got off another one, this time to Lentz, for a ten-yard gain. Lentz and Rodgers made it first down on Princeton's 28-yard line and another long toss, this time with Mills receiving, put the ball only eight yards from the Tiger goal line.

The Princeton line found itself here and displayed its best offensive form of the day, holding for downs against the plunges of the Mountaineers' backs.

Wittmer's kick was short, however, and Hite came back to Princeton's 25-yard line. On a double pass, Lentz made eleven yards. Hager raced over the line for the Blue and Gold's third touchdown of the quarter when he got loose and picked Rodgers's long pass from the air.

Frost Williams, Princeton's right end, here pulled a play that is rarely seen on the gridiron. The touchdown was made close to the sideline and the visitors elected to punt out. Williams started with the ball and blocked the kick before it could reach the hands of the man waiting to receive it, West Virginia thus being deprived of an opportunity to try for a goal.

Murray brought a ray of hope to the dazed Princeton rooters when he raced back fifty yards over the chalk marks after taking the ball on the kickoff. But the Tigers lost the ball when two passes grounded.

Scheerer's work, which was conspicuous all afternoon, commenced in the second quarter. An exchange of punts left the ball in Princeton's possession on her own 45-yard line. Scheerer dropped back to the 30-yard mark and got off a kick which failed to stop until it had crossed West Virginia's goal line, the ball covering a total of almost seventy-five yards.

Wittmer Raised Tiger Hopes.

The Mountaineers put the ball in play on their 20-yard line and with a bewildering series of forward passes and with irresistible plunging by Hite, Lentz, Neale, and King, carried the ball in successive first downs to Princeton's 25-yard mark. Four passes in a row failed here, and on the next play Wittmer tore off around his right end for a 50-yard run on a delayed pass. It looked for a moment as if he were headed for a touchdown, but he was unable to get by the last West Virginia man, and was forced out of bounds. The half ended with the ball in midfield.

During the second and third quarters the playing of the Tigers improved considerably and the defense tightened when a touchdown threatened. The husky backs of the mountaineers, however, had a peculiar tendency of stopping as they hit the line and then picking a small hole and continuing their journey through it. This ability netted the visitors many valuable yards.

In the last period the West Virginia coach rushed his second string players into the fray and one of them, Martin, was responsible for the final score of the day. The ball hovered in the centre of the field. West Virginia, satisfied with its big lead, was kicking on every occasion and the Tigers, unable to gain by passes or runs, were doing the same thing. Finally Rodgers, who had returned to the game and replaced Neale, who, by the way, is a brother of the Cincinnati right fielder, saw his opportunity and slipped a long pass to Martin, who was far over the line. The latter was well clear of the Orange and Black players and scored the last six points for his team.

Princeton Missed Stars.

The Tigers were without the services today of Henry Trimble, whose sensational work against Colgate stamps him as a coming star. Garrity and Lourie, both of whom are recovering from bruises, were also absent. Keck, the huge tackle, was also on the sick list and the line suffered from the loss of his defensive play.

The work of Scheerer and Wittmer on the defense was noticeable all afternoon. The visitors were too nervy and experienced, however, for the green Tiger team, and the light Orange and Black backs were unable to get going against them on the heavy field.

West Virginia has a great team. They showed that this afternoon. They vindicated their defeat by Pittsburgh and the opinion was general that they have just now reached the top of their form.

AMHERST, Mass., Nov. 1.—Amherst swamped Worcester Polytechnic Institute in the football game here today by a score of 42 to 0. The Purple and White outweighed their opponents in practically every position. Their backfield, minus Captain Phillips, pierced the Worcester line almost at will, making sixteen first downs to the visitors' three.

Kilby and MacCracken, substitutes in the Amherst backfield, made several good gains through the line, McCracken breaking through left tackle in the third quarter for a thirty-six-yard run and a touchdown. Shirley was forced from the game near the end of the second quarter with a dislocated arm.

RHODE ISLAND OUTCLASSED

Holy Cross Eleven Scores Easy Victory in Game by Score of 29 to 3.

Special to The New York Times.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 1.—Using almost an entire team of substitutes, Holy Cross outclassed Rhode Island here today and won 29 to 3. The visitors showed a poor defense against the Holy Cross backfield and could do very little with the stonewall defense of the Purple forwards. The Holy Cross backfield fumbled frequently, which gave Rhode Island its chance to score.

Johnson, the Rhode Island full back, kicked a pretty goal from the 38-yard line toward the end of the first quarter. Keating, the Jersey City boy, was used as the pilot for the first time and showed good generalship. He ran the team with plenty of pep and ran back punts in good style.

COLUMBIA ELEVEN GETS BIG SURPRISE

Union Holds Blue and White to a Scoreless Tie—Wittner and Shaw the Stars.

Everything was fast and slippery in the mud on South Field yesterday afternoon except the score. Twenty-two husky warriors battled around for a full hour, flipping oozy dirt into one another's faces, but at the end Union College had held Columbia to a scoreless tie. Now and then it seemed a case of the New Yorkers holding the up-Staters at bay during the occasional moments when the latter really threatened.

Play was fast, furious, and ferocious at times, but the great big unfortunate truth was that the real high lights were generally exhibited when the ball was in midfield and not dangerously close to either's goal. Union started with a rush, but soon became winded and stayed second best for the greater part of the game. Now and then Columbia seemed to be trying to lose, so insistent were two or three linemen in their offside playing, which always brought penalties, but all and all the New Yorkers have a right to know that they were the better eleven.

If it hadn't been rainy, and if South Field hadn't resembled a quagmire more than an honest-to-goodness gridiron, the scoreboard tender might have had a busy afternoon, but every one was reasonably happy with the outcome, especially the visitors. Sol Metzger, who combines writing sports yarns with coaching football teams, took his squad back up-State to the city with the unpronounceable name last night in a joyful frame of mind.

Sol had fair enough luck years ago with W. and J., but this season his Unionites have played second fiddle to such teams as Williams, Hobart, and Wesleyan, and yesterday's experience of not having their goal line crossed gave the Union men a new confidence. "Jiminy crickets," said Sol, (or words to that effect,) "my team hasn't played so well all Fall. I've got ends where half backs ought to be on account of injuries, and yet there's more dash and skill being displayed today than in any other game this season."

There are probably more sporting fans in New York City to the square inch than in any other village in the wide world. With baseball over, football beckons the rooters, but yesterday the weather man was peeved about something and ordered a drizzling rain turned on. When a spectator had forgotten his umbrella he hoisted a perfectly valuable newspaper over his head, although he had only read the headlines. There was a lot of shoving, pushing, and edging over out of the wet spots on the grand stand seats, but the game held its interest for all of the 5,000 who attended and only one small boy left the field. A special cop chased him back over the 114th Street fence after he had almost wormed his way into the inclosure.

Columbia Penalized Often.

Fred Dawson's Columbians had many things in their favor, and one or two features disappointing. Seven penalties for offside were called by Referee Heneage and one setback of fifteen yards brought the total loss of ground up to fifty yards. Three offside plays were called in each of the first two periods. The penalties came near being disastrous. Union made three first downs in the first quarter, each one brought on by Columbia's offside errors, and one of the two first downs in each of the second and fourth periods was also helped in this way. Against Columbia's loss of fifty yards Union lost only twenty by penalty.

The New Yorkers made up the losses somewhat by Thornton's great, long, spiral punts. This half back star, who played last year on the Dartmouth S. A. T. C. eleven, will take a place in Columbia history as one of her best kickers. In the first period he got one off no less than 68 yards, a quite considerable boot on a 100-yard gridiron, and throughout the battle he averaged more than 50 yards, even though using at all times a wet, overweighted, slippery ball.

Union made eight first downs, only three of which came from rushing the ball, the five others as the direct result of penalties on the Gothamites. Columbia collected a total of seven first downs, and each one was on straight football, which found gaping, wide holes in the Garnet defense. Columbia tried the forward pass only twice, once in the first and again in the last quarter. Union was more successful, even with the wet, heavy, treacherous pigskin, which would seem to have prevented an aerial game, and out of eight attempts the up-Staters completed three heaves. The trouble with Union in the forward passing can be laid at Wittner's door. This shifty little half back, who starred for the visitors, made the mistake of throwing his passes from too far back of the line. He invariably planted himself ten or eleven yards behind the centre, preferring to play safely and take his time rather than toss a quick, low throw to his forwards. As a result, the actual gains made by Union with the passes were small. The first netted only four yards, the second six, and the last successful try eight yards.

Wittner Stars for Union.

Wittner was the individual star for Union in other departments of the game, and seemed to have unlimited endurance. Comstock, the quarter back, hurled him against the New Yorkers in the majority of plays, and later Wittner succeeded Comstock in calling signals when the latter was carried from the field late in the game with torn ligaments. On the offensive Union made a rather gloomy showing, probably due to the nervous, fidgety quarter back. The linemen probably called for repetition of signals occasionally, but Comstock never seemed sure of his job as field general and often altered his offensive plans two or three times before the ball was snapped.

For Columbia, Charlie Shaw, the track captain and star who shows equal ability on the football field, did what other runners couldn't. Somehow or other Shaw's feet held to the pudgy, slippery field, and he furnished the real bright lights of a game made dismal by short gains. The second half opened with the rain falling harder than before. Rushes gained little, and after an exchange of punts Eccles received the ball on Columbia's 25-yard line. Shaw was then called to take the leather, and before he was downed he had circled Union's left end for 38 yards, the longest run of the game. Shaw had no easy voyage, but he made clever use of his straight arm and shook of all tackles until he was nailed on Union's 37-yard line.

A Columbia touchdown seemed imminent. Captain Canapary entered the game in Applebaum's place and on the next play twisted, squirmed, and bored his way through the line for sixteen yards. Eccles made three more and Canapary another three, bringing the ball under the shadow of the up-Staters' goal line, only fifteen yards away. Canapary here tried a drop kick, but the heavy, wet ball rolled weakly across the field and was captured by Lyman on Union's two-yard line. Canapary later tried another drop kick in the last minute of play, but his boot from about twenty yards in front of the goal was wide and low.

Other Runs by Shaw.

Shaw made two other sensational runs. Early in the last period he tore off 10 yards around Union's left end, being downed by Wittner after he seemed to have a clear field, and a few plays later he made a third sprint in a wide end play. This time his total gain was 32 yards. Union tacklers seemed to fall off him once he put out his wicked straight arm jab, and the remarkable feature was Shaw's ability to keep his feet in the mud. Columbia tacklers worked to better advantage throughout the game. Dawson ordered them to throw themselves in front of Union runners when actual tackling seemed impossible. The results were good, for the half back carrying the ball could not keep his footing while trying to dodge around a man, and he usually slipped and fell.

Union's only chance for a score was in the second period. With the ball only thirty yards from the Columbia goal line, Comstock drove through the line for three yards. A forward pass was incomplete, and then another overhead heave, Wittner to Nottman, gained six yards. A third pass was attempted, high and true in direction. Goff got under the ball, stood waiting for it on Columbia's goal line for what seemed an easy catch and a sure touchdown, but Eccles, the New York quarter back, hurled himself through the air and knocked the ball to the ground. It rolled over the line and was put in Columbia's possession on her own 20-yard line.

Columbia felt the loss of Ed Quigley, the star quarter back, keenly. This youngster is being kept under the trainer's care as a result of his injuries last week against Amherst. Eccles essayed to replace him, and although the former freshman star knows football, he was weak in catching and returning punts, and Columbia failed to gain much on his recoveries of Wittner's kicks.

FINE GRIDIRON AT COBLENZ.

American Soldiers Will Have Plenty of Football.

COBLENZ, Germany, Oct. 20.—Elaborate preparations have been made here for the coming football season. Grounds and stadiums which were only partly finished a year ago have been made permanent playing fields, and many of them compare very favorably with the best college gridirons in the United States.

The most elaborately finished ground is right here in Coblenz, known as "Carnival Island." It was on this ground that the Third Army championships were decided last season, but the ground at that time was not in as good condition as it is today. Neither were there proper facilities such as dressing rooms. This ground was once a truck patch and was converted into an athletic field in January of this year. For the last two months the engineers have been regrading the field and making other preparations and today the main football field is as level as a billiard table. At this island, there are now two regulation baseball fields, two football fields, a golf course of nine holes, a polo ground, a quarter-mile cinder track with 220-yard straightaway and outdoor basketball courts. On another part is a ring for horse shows and nine tennis courts.

Suitable bleachers to accommodate 5,000 spectators have been built, and there also are a large number of properly equipped dressing rooms with showers, rubbing tables, and store rooms.

Not only at Coblenz are there grounds available for the soldiers, but at Andernach, Montabaur, and Neuwied the old grounds left by the A. E. F. have been taken over by the Y. M. C. A. and enlarged and remade in every particular.

CAUSE TEST OF BLUE LAW.

Ball Game Today Planned by Philadelphia Liberty League.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 1.—The Blue Law of 1794 is to be tested in the Supreme Court of the United States by Philadelphians who are identified with the Constitutional Liberty League, a chartered organization. A game of baseball will be played in Fairmount Park tomorrow under the management of Clement H. Congdon, Vice President of the Constitutional Liberty League, who will personally take part in the game, although not a ball player.

The Philadelphia Sabbath Association which, for nearly a century, has been causing arrests under the Act of 1794, will have Mr. Congdon arrested, and he will appeal the case from court to court, if necessary, until it is finally decided by the Supreme Court.

W. and L. Wins a 3 to 0 Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Nov. 1.—The Washington and Lee Generals defeated V. P. I., 3 to 0, today, a field goal by Silverstein in the last five minutes of the game put W. and L. ahead. The ball was in Tech's territory most of the time. Raines, McDonald, Silverstein, and Matoon starred for the White and Blue, while Redd, Crisp, Graham, and Handwick did the best work for Tech.

ARMY ELEVEN HARD PRESSED BY TUFTS

Cadet Regulars Are Rushed to Rescue and West Point Wins by 24 to 13 Score.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Tufts threw a scare into the Army folks today when its plucky football team, pitted at first against eleven second-string players, scored two touchdowns from which one goal was kicked. This bombshell hit the Army camp during the first few moments of play and its explosion caused a veritable panic in the cadets' billet. Hurried calls were sent out for the Army 'Varsity men, and as fast as they could gird up their loins the coaches sent them forth to battle in the sea of mud which covered the gridiron. By the time the Army was ready for the second half all the regulars were in the fight, but the cadets were trailing, 13 to 0. West Point finally won, 24 to 13.

Macchia, a fast man at end for Tufts, snatched an Army fumble on his own thirty-five-yard line in the first three minutes of play and ran sixty-five yards for a touchdown. The goal was kicked by Thornton. Commell almost duplicated this feat within two minutes when an Army substitute back fumbled about the same spot. Commell was stopped from behind at the Army's five-yard mark. Two slams at the Army line broke it wide open, Smith carrying the ball over for the score but the goal was missed. It was then the Army coaches sounded the call for help. The weak spots were hurriedly bolstered up.

McQuarrie smashed through Reardon and Sellow for a twenty-five-yard run for West Point's first score late in the third quarter. He kicked the goal. Immediately following the opening of the final period McQuarrie booted a pretty placement goal from Tufts's 44-yard line.

Later Byers recovered a loose ball fumbled by Martin on Tufts's 30-yard line. After a trio of smashes at the line, Daniel opened up a hole for McQuarrie and the big fellow broke through for another run to a touchdown, kicking the goal.

Lystad's fine work gave the Army its final score, the lithe Army back sliding through behind Daniel from the 3-yard line. McQuarrie kicked the goal. Blaik, Greene, Daniels, and McQuarrie all starred for the Army.

NAVY IS VICTOR, 20 TO 6.

Conquers West Virginia Wesleyan Eleven on a Muddy Field.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 1.—The midshipmen proved themselves better mud horses than the mountaineers this afternoon, defeating the hard-fighting eleven of West Virginia Wesleyan by 20 to 6, on a soggy field, with the rain falling during most of the playing. The teams suffered about equally from failure to hold the ball, and the winning element was the staunchness of the navy line, the visitors being unable to pierce it materially at any time.

The navy made all of its points in the first half, a touchdown in the first quarter and two, with resulting goals, in the second, when the best available team was in the game. Though nearly all of them remained through the third quarter, the visitors were able to meet them on even terms and prevent a score, while in the final period, with the navy substitutes in, Wesleyan scored after Fisher had picked the ball upon a fumble and made a seventy-yard run. The second string men were unable to score this period, though they made a splendid effort towards the last, carrying the ball from past midfield to the one-yard point, and having another try just as final time was called.

From the navy standpoint, the game was satisfactory in demonstrating the worth of a number of the men who have been plugging along in the backfield the whole season. Koehler, who took Alford's place, the latter being out of the game through injuries, played a high-class game and was one of the last to go out. Clark kept up his good work, and had just run fifty-five yards, the longest run of the game from scrimmage, when injuries caused him to drop out. The work of Watters and Rawlings was specially noteworthy, while Taylor and Watters, two plebes, were the heroes of the brave effort the second string team made to score just before time was called.

Wesleyan's score came with about half of the final period over. A bad pass from the navy centre caused a fumble, and Fisher, the visiting captain, grabbed it and ran seventy yards for a touchdown, not a navy man standing in his way. He failed to kick goal.

STRONG SOCCER SQUAD OUT.

Many Promising Candidates Are Trying for Team at Harvard.

Harvard has one of the largest and most promising squads of soccer candidates in its history. Although V. B. Kellet is the only soccer "H" man on the squad, many experienced players who have gained their knowledge of the game either on previous freshman teams or before entering Harvard are candidates. Captain Gardner Tilton is a former Andover player who was a star as a member of his freshman team in 1916. He is playing centre half. Kellet is at the right outside position.

Included on the squad are two players who received their training in soccer as members of English teams. K. C. Darling formerly played at Westminster, England, where he captained the team, while W. S. Schmid also played the game as a member of British teams.

COLUMBIA FRESHMEN WIN.

Defeat St. Paul's School, 14 to 0, in an Open Game.

Successful manipulation of the forward pass gave the Columbia freshmen a 14-0 victory over the St. Paul's School eleven yesterday afternoon at Garden City, L. I. The college yearlings scored first in the opening period, when Burt ran fifty yards for a touchdown following a long heave by Norris. Blondel kicked the goal.

In the third quarter the freshmen added another seven points in the first two minutes after the kick-off. A forty-five-yard forward pass, Pullyn to Russell, and Pullyn's dash for thirty yards carried the ball to the three-yard line, from which point Norris went over for a touchdown. Blondel also kicked the goal.

Burt, right half back on the freshmen team, was elected captain before the start of the game. His playing and that of Norris, Pullyn and Russell featured the victory.

The lineup was:

BROOKLYN PREP WINS.

Defeats Fordham Prep on the Latter's Field, 19 to 0.

The Fordham Prep football team was defeated in a rather one-sided game by the Brooklyn Prep eleven at Fordham Field yesterday afternoon. The score was 19 to 0. The visitors presented a strong backfield and found little difficulty in breaking through the Fordham line for large gains.

G. Smith, the Brooklyn Prep quarter back, who figured in the three touchdowns, was the star of the contest. He played a splendid game both on the offense and defense. McBride, the Fordham quarter back, starred for the Bronx eleven.

The initial touchdown was made in the first few minutes of play when G. Smith carried the ball across after the Brooklyn backs had plunged through the Maroon line for three successive first downs. Fordham then lost its only opportunity to score when G. Smith intercepted a forward pass on his own 15-yard line.

In the third period Branders crossed the Bronx team's line for another touchdown after a successful forward pass. Brooklyn Prep scored a peculiar touchdown in the closing period when Monohan, racing for a forward pass, slipped in the mud, skidded over the Fordham line and caught the pigskin as he lay on his back on the ground.

COMMERCE IN TIE GAME.

Is Held to 0 to 0 Score by Morris High School Football Team.

High School of Commerce's football eleven struck a snag yesterday when it clashed with the Morris H. S. team on the Polo Grounds and was held to a scoreless tie by the Bronxonians. The Morris contingent, supposedly one of the weakest of the contending teams in the Manhattan championship struggle, displayed surprising ability against the Commerce team. The teams played on a wet, treacherous field, and the ball was slippery from the steady drizzle which fell throughout the conflict. This made playing up to form a difficult matter. Fumbles interfered considerably with the efforts of both sides.

Commerce's representatives displayed the better form, but the combination of treacherous footing, a slippery ball and Morris' unexpected defensive strength, proved too great an obstacle to be hurdled.

Through the opening half and the third period the play shifted from one side of the field to the other, with neither team ever threatening seriously to score. In the third period the outlook was promising for a Commerce touchdown, but, despite a penalty for illegal substitution which gave Commerce an advance of twenty-five yards, no touchdown resulted, and a brace of kicks in attempts for field goals went wide of their mark.

CLASON POINT DEFEATED.

Kingsley School's Football Team Wins Game by Score of 9 to 0.

Kingsley School's football team added another victory to its season's record yesterday when it defeated the Clason Point Military Academy eleven on the Kingsley gridiron at Essex Fells, N. J., by a score of 9 to 0. A touchdown by Full Back McCracken, in the opening period, and a field goal by Cavanagh, who kicked over the cross-bar from the twenty-yard line in the second period, gave Kingsley the game. In the second half the military lads fought keenly to overcome their rivals, but Kingsley's defense held like a stonewall when danger threatened.

YALE SCORES EASY FOOTBALL VICTORY

Outplays Maryland State Eleven and Wins, 31 to 0—Many Substitutes Used.

BULLDOGS SHOW STRENGTH

Gain 289 Yards by Rushing Ball—Blue Uncorks a Double Forward Pass.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 1.—Forcing a touchdown over Maryland State's goal line in each period and adding a field goal in the final chapter of the football game in the bowl this afternoon, Yale defeated the Southerners, 31 to 0.

Consistently strong and aggressive at all times, Yale's attack was brilliant. Of its five accepted scoring chances, four were earned, one being a present resulting from a fumble. Two more chances were mislaid, the first in the opening period, when the Maryland defense, which, although light, was gritty, held and compelled Neville to try for a field goal. The kick was short and low.

The second chance to score went astray in the third period when Yale uncovered an unexpected feature. Kempton threw a forward pass to Joe Neville, which advanced the ball to the Maryland 15-yard mark. The play proved to be unfinished, for Neville tossed the ball to Braden, who apparently was headed for the score, with a free field, but Braden fumbled and Yale lost the ball.

Yale Uses Substitutes.

Yale took the game as an incidental development of its team for the Brown, Princeton, and Harvard contests which remain on its schedule. The Blue used thirty-one players, almost three complete elevens. After the second team had been tested the coaches began sending the third eleven upon the chalk lines, and had used third-string guards, tackles, quarter backs, centres, and ends when the final whistle sounded.

Yale scored ten first downs; Maryland made three. Yale ran the seven kick-offs back 150 yards, averaging 21 yards each, attesting to the dashing form of Kempton and Joe Neville. In rushing the ball Yale gained 289 yards, to 44 for Maryland. Yale punted eleven times for a total distance of 521 yards, averaging 48 yards; Maryland kicked eleven times for 435 yards, for an average of 40 yards. Maryland ran back punts for only 12 yards, while Yale plunged back 153 yards. Yale tried nine forward passes, six of which were completed, for a gain of 81 yards. Two were bad and one was intercepted.

Maryland Passes Weak.

Maryland tried four forward passes, two of which were good and which gained 15 yards. One went back and one was intercepted. Yale fumbled twice and recovered both misplays; Maryland juggled once and lost the ball to Yale on that occasion. Yale was penalized four times for a total of 50 yards, while Maryland was set back three times for 40 yards.

Yale's first period score followed a down-the-field march, which Kempton's run back of Gilbert's punt made possible. Yale had reached the fifteen-yard line when the Maryland defense stiffened. On the fourth down, Neville's field goal trial missed.

Two minutes later Kempton, catching Knode's short punt on Maryland's forty-yard line, crashed back twenty yards. He alternated with Full Back Fred Webb in six-yard gains. Maryland fought stubbornly, but Kempton's centre plunge for the final foot spelled touchdown.

Kempton's remarkable fifty-yard punt, which floated out of bounds at the Maryland five-yard line, at the opening of the second period again put the Southerners in bad, and Knode's short return punt to the Maryland forty-yard line allowed Kempton to star with another run back to the visitors' twenty-yard line.

Handicapped by a fifteen-yard penalty, Kempton uncorked his double forward pass, which Braden's fumble spoile. Another short kick by Knode and a fifteen-yard run back by Kempton carried the ball to the Maryland twenty-yard mark, where Braden and Kempton alternated in plunging through centre until Braden scored a touchdown.

Blue Shows Power.

Yale's most dazzling and impressive display of ground-gaining fireworks was shown in the third period. Joe Neville ran Riggs's kick-off back thirty yards, and followed it by whizzing outside right tackle for twenty more yards. Webb and Neville and Webb again started into the right tackle hole, Webb's smash netting Yale's third tally.

In the middle of this period the third Maryland first down was made on MacDonald's forward pass to Eppley, carrying the ball to midfield. However, another heave went straight into the arms of Joe Neville. Yale appeared close to the shoals at this stage when it was penalized 15 yards to its own 5-yard line, but Neville's 50-yard kick lifted the ball again into Maryland's territory as the period ended.

Knode's kick went high and short and Yale took up the running from its 40-yard line. Braden's forward pass to Aldrich consumed 30 yards of the distance, catching the Marylanders flat-footed. They doggedly held Yale until the fourth down, when Aldrich kicked out of bounds at the visitors' 5-yard mark. Knode's return punt was short, and La Roche's forward pass to Braden took Yale to Maryland's 5-yard mark. Braden scored the touchdown.

Maryland's fumble gave the Eli's their final score, Gilbert losing the leather at his 20-yard mark. Yale could not gain, however, but Braden's toe saved the situation, his field goal adding Yale's final three points to the score.

Rain fell during the last half and the crowd left the bowl by thousands before the referee's whistle sounded in the gathering darkness.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 1.—Penn's soccer team defeated Princeton here today, 5 goals to 2. The Red and Blue team showed more experience and better team play than Princeton had. FUMBLE BEATS HAMILTON.

Vermont Player Falls on Ball for Touchdown—Score is 6 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

CLINTON, N. Y., Nov. 1.—On a soft, muddy field Vermont overcame the Hamilton team today, 6 to 0, when a fumbled kick rolled over Hamilton's goal line and the speedy Green Mountain boys covered it in a flash. The game early developed into a kicking duel, with Hamilton having the edge in this department of the game. There was so much exchanging of punts that neither team made a single first down by straight football. Hamilton made only two first downs, both on penalties, in the entire game, while Vermont failed to penetrate the Buff and Blue line at any time of the game.

Vermont kicked off and Johnson ran the ball back to the 30-yard line. Here the kicking duel opened, as neither team could make any sort of headway on the slippery field. Lawler, booting the ball for Hamilton, forced the Green and White team back, and the quarter ended with the sphere in Hamilton's possession on her own 40-yard line. Starting the second period, Hamilton kicked from here to Brock, who returned the punt to Pape. The ball came floating slowly and bounced out of Pape's arms, and before the Hamilton cheering section knew what had happened a Vermont end had fallen on it for the only touchdown of the game.

In actual playing Hamilton outclassed her opponents. She gained about twice as much ground and completed one forward pass. Toward the end of the game Coach Prettyman, in trying to bring about a touchdown, sent the entire second string back field into the game. They opened up a strong attack, but failed to get within scoring distance.

HARVARD ELEVEN CONTINUES ITS FAST WORK, TAKING SPRINGFIELD INTO CAMP WITH EASE

HARVARD TRIUMPHS OVER SPRINGFIELD

Pushes Two Touchdowns Across in First Period and Wins Finally, 20 to 0.

EDDIE CASEY BACK IN FORM

Baffling Side-Step Charges Bring Long Gains—"Y" Collegians Use Forward Pass 31 Times.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 1.—Except in the first period today, the Springfield Y. M. C. A. College football team gave Harvard plenty of action, the Crimson scoring only three touchdowns and two goals for a final score of 20 to 0. After the intermission, and while substitutes were appearing often, the Crimson slowed down on the muddy field and spent most of its time guessing what the Springfield visitors would be able to accomplish with their forward passing game.

Springfield's overhead display was ingenious, the team had three players who could throw the ball and there was good receiving. This attack carried the ball into Harvard's territory several times, but the attempts to produce scores all went wrong. Springfield used the forward pass thirty-one times this afternoon, completing eleven of its passes for a total distance of 130 yards and on many of the plays Harvard was completely bewildered.

Good open field tackling was all that prevented the Crimson from being scored on. Once, when Captain Murray interfered with a pass, Springfield was awarded the ball on the Crimson's 21-yard line, but after a five-yard gain by rushing, a pass was hurled into the end zone. Prior to this Springfield reached Harvard's 25-yard line by the air route, but showed nothing of a rushing punch, and Civilette missed when he tried for a field goal.

Harvard Opens With a Rush.

At the opening of the game Harvard rushed its sturdy opponents off their feet. The Cambridge line had a much lower charge than in earlier games, and lifted the Springfield defense back, and then split it apart. Harvard followed the ball in its usual style, and this helped toward two of the scores.

At the very beginning of the game Drew of Springfield fumbled and Hubbard was on the ball. This was on Springfield's 32-yard line, and when Hubbard advanced the ball 7 yards Harvard set itself for its running game and proceeded to march down the field. Later, a 50-yard journey scored for Harvard again and, toward the end of the second quarter, Kane blocked a kick and Hubbard again was on the job to get the loose ball.

Only two minutes remained in the first half, but Harvard scored in two scrimmages. On the first, Eddie Casey, who has not been doing any forward passing out in the open, set himself and, with that left arm of his, let the ball drive far down the field. He was standing on his own 40-yard line when he made the pass, the ball carrying to Humphrey on Springfield's 28-yard line, and the Harvard half back gaining 8 more yards before he was finally downed. Casey, who had been running through and around Springfield on every attempt, tore around the right end. He was slapped twice, but had too much speed and outdistanced the visiting secondaries in the race across the football lot and to the corner of the gridiron.

Casey Baffles Springfield.

Casey's backfield game was the big feature of the Crimson's play this afternoon. He has been out two weeks, but he came back strong and looked better than Harvard has ever seen him. The pace he set while helping toward Harvard's second touchdown was magnificent. In carrying the ball from the middle of the field to the goal line Captain Murray gave the ball to Casey five times, and he came through for forty-four yards. He started with one 20-yard rush at his own left end and then cut through the line on the other side, side-stepping as he was jumped for by the Springfield backs, but always going.

The other Harvard backs did not look so good today. Murray opened his attack considerably this afternoon. He tried two lateral passes, neither of which fooled the Springfield men any. The Crimson's forward pasing game succeeded only once, this being Casey's fine heave to Humphrey. The other five passes were incompleted. Felton and Humphrey contributed the most consistent kicking of the season. The punts had fine height and Springfield made few run backs. The entire Harvard team was down under the boots, and the open field tackling was hard and sure. In this game, as in so many others this Fall, Harvard showed the results of detail coaching.

Springfield used a square backfield formation, and also had a shift. The forward pass plays embodied double passes and laterals, and it is likely that with a drier ball the team would have been able to complete more of these open plays. Schaeffer, Watson, Civilette, and Drew did most of the receiving and showed sure-handedness. Harvard was slow to analyze the plays, but late in the game Havemeyer did some fine work on the long shots and saved a lot of trouble.

Crimson Weakens in Second Half.

The second half was disappointing for Harvard. There were plenty of the regulars in at the start, but Coach Fisher pulled a lot of them out, as the field was getting bad, since he needs all his talent for the Princeton game next week. In the third period Harvard made one fine advance from Springfield's thirty-five to the four-yard line, but had three or more yards to go on a fourth down and then played for a drop kick. Felton's seventeen-yard shot from an angle hitting one of the goal posts.

At the end of the game Springfield passed the ball on downs to Harvard on its own thirty-yard line, having failed to complete four forward passes. There was no time left for rushing, and Felton missed another field goal, this time from the thirty-four-yard line. Springfield tossed off nineteen passes in the second half, completing six of them, but did not once get close to the Harvard goal line.

The wet field doubtless held Harvard's score down today, for the line could do anything it liked with the Springfield forwards.

The Crimson's offensive at the beginning of the game was all powerful. The field bothered Humphrey and Burnham a little, but Casey lived in the mud. In the first drive from the 25-yard line to the goal Casey's first end run was held to eight yards because he went outside, but on the next play, on which he reached the 12-yard line, he did some beautiful sidestepping just after he found a hole.

Burnham Scores First.

A Springfield off-side then gave Harvard a first down on the 6-yard line and after Casey had driven to within a foot of the goal, Burnham was shot across. In the next series of rushes, from the middle of the field, Casey did some beautiful work. His opener was a 20-yard swing to the left, and was as pretty as the one on which he later scored. He then ripped off thirteen yards more through the line, Woods, Clark, and Hubbard opening the Springfield line.

Harvard then used rush plays only to score. Casey took the ball in every rush except one. Captain Murray kept the team moving today and as the eleven came out in good shape physically, there are not likely to be any more handicaps before the Princeton game. Harvard, however, still doesn't know what it means to go up against a rush line that can break through and tackle. Its game, although splendidly smooth running, still remains to be tested thoroughly.

GAMES HERE THIS WEEK.

Rutgers Vs. Syracuse and Penn Vs. Dartmouth at Polo Grounds.

New York will be the scene of two promising football games this week. On Tuesday, Election Day, Rutgers and Syracuse will clash at the Polo Grounds. Syracuse looked like one of the season's mightiest elevens when they downed Pittsburgh a few weeks ago, but the Orange got a hard set-back last week, when Washington and Jefferson beat the Salt City team. The defeat, however, has worked a world of good with Coach O'Neill's players, and they will have restored their confidence when they meet Rutgers here.

Coach Sanford for the first time this year will have his strongest array of talent against Syracuse. With the exception of French, all his invalids have recuperated slowly but surely, and he expects that the Scarlet will play its best game of the season on Election Day.

One of the most important games of the Eastern football season will be the Pennsylvania-Dartmouth game at the Polo Grounds on Saturday. This will be the first visit of a Pennsylvania team to this city since 1905, when the Red and Blue played Columbia here. The Penn eleven this year ranks with the best of the season, and the Philadelphians have fond visions of going through the season without a defeat and putting in a claim for first honors.

Dartmouth has a world of confidence that the big Green team can triumph over the Quakers. Playing on a neutral field will be a far different matter from playing Penn at Franklin Field, and Coach Spears will send an eleven of sturdy, confident gridiron warriors against Folwell's team. Football has never had as much popularity locally as it has enjoyed this season, and it is expected that big crowds will witness both of the Polo Grounds attractions.

BAD PROSPECT FOR DEER.

Guides, Too, Tremble at Rush for Hunting Licenses.

ALBANY, Nov. 1.—Unprecedented demand for hunting licenses is keeping the Conservation Commission on the jump filling requests from all over the State for supplies of licenses and buttons to supplement those already exhausted. Never in the history of the commission, says Llewellyn Legge, Chief of the Division of Fish and Game, has there been such a rush for licenses as this Fall. The unusual demand is attributed partly to the large number of recruits in the hunters' ranks from among men who have had their first experience of handling firearms in military service; partly to a continuance of the same vacation spirit which has kept all resort hotels and boarding houses filled to capacity this Summer, and partly to the new law, in effect for the first time this season, by which doe deer may be shot in the Adirondacks as well as bucks. There is no question, according to the commission, that the greater prospect of securing a deer, now that the bars have been let down for both sexes, has attracted thousands of new hunters to the Adirondacks who have never been deer hunting before.

In spite of the fact that the Conservation Commission made definite provision for increased hunting this Fall, the demand for licenses has so far exceeded all previous records that additional cards and buttons may yet have to be secured from the manufacturers. Already 275,000 resident licenses have been printed, which is 10 per cent. more than in any previous year—the order for the last three years having been 250,000.

As an example of the quite unprecedented demand for licenses, the Conservation Commission cited the fact that calls for additional supplies were recently received from thirty-two different County Clerks in one day. Under ordinary conditions these clerks would have had sufficient licenses to carry them to the end of the season.

The commission states that under this unusual pressure it is doing all in its power to prevent inconvenience or delay in the issuance of licenses. Books, buttons, and record cards are being rushed from Albany as fast as they are applied for, and in addition supplies are being shifted from Town Clerks' offices where there may be a surplus to points where a shortage has developed.

SYRACUSE OUTPLAYS BROWN DECISIVELY

Up-State Eleven Wins, 13 to 0, and Shows Superiority in All Departments of Play.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 1.—By one touchdown and two field goals, 13 to 0, Syracuse defeated Brown here today in a game that was a bitter disappointment to Brown followers. The margin of strength between the two teams was greater than the score indicates, the New York lads outplaying and outgaming the Brunonians in every department of the game.

Brown's fast light backs never had a chance on the slippery field, and, repeatedly, before they could get started, the visiting forwards nailed them in their tracks. Neither team contributed anything in the way of spectacular runs. Practically all of Brown's plays were sent around the Syracuse ends, or rather sent at those ends. They never got further than those sure tackling wing men, Brown and Schwarzer, and the Brunonian backs could do nothing through the Syracuse line. Their own forwards were unable to open a way for them from start to finish.

Brown Weak on Offense.

During the entire game Brown made but three first downs, and, each time the ten-yard advance was obtained only through the aid of a five-yard penalty for offside play on the visiting team. Brown's defense, strong at times, was at other periods in the game lamentably weak, and Parker, Fallon, Erwin, and Ackley repeatedly went through the line for substantial gains.

Members of both teams contributed brilliant individual work, Fallon, Ewing, and Ackley, with the Syracuse ends, playing air-tight football from start to finish, while Culian, Williams, and McSweeney were consistent stars for Brown. Occasionally the Brown ends were boxed, but in the main their play was creditable.

Both teams attempted but little aerial work. Syracuse put over one beautifully executed forward pass, Ackley to Abbot, which netted twenty-two yards. Others which were attempted were broken up by the Brown defense. The Brunonians failed to complete any one of their several attempts, and once when Oden threw a pass on Brown's thirty-yard line Gulick of Syracuse was on the receiving line and threatened to turn the play into a touchdown for his own team.

Two Beautiful Field Goals.

Ackley's toe furnished one of the brilliant features of the game, and incidentally added six points to the Syracuse score. Two beautiful field goals, the first in the second period from the twenty-eight-yard line and the second in the final session from the thirty-three-yard line, were performances which forced admiration from the Brown stands.

Ackley's punting also gained many yards. In the early periods of the game he outdistanced Emery, though, during the last half Emery was getting both distance and direction. During the entire game the play was largely in Brown's territory.

Brown's defense in the first half was considerably better than in the last two periods. After several exchanges of punts, Syracuse started what threatened to be a march for a touchdown. On the ten-yard line the Brown defense stiffened and on the fourth down Ackley tried a forward pass, which was not completed. The ball went to Brown and Emery booted it out of danger. The period ended without score by either side.

Early in the second period Ackley tried a field goal from the forty-yard line but missed. It was not until the last thirty seconds of play in this period that Ackley put over his first field goal.

In the third period Syracuse started an attack that was irresistible and the Brown defense crumbled. Ackley and Fallon tore open big holes but the former was finally forced to punt. O'Neil then sent Ewing in in place of Parker, and, with Ackley, Fallon, and Ewing carrying the ball, the visitors made a steady march to the Brown goal line, Ackley going across with the ball. Ackley also kicked the goal, making the score 10 to 0.

The final score came in the fourth period when the Syracuse quarter back sent over another field goal, this time from the thirty-three-yard line.

STEVENS WINS ANOTHER.

Defeats Rensselaer Poly, 13 to 0—Bloss and Ford Shine.

Special to The New York Times.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 1.—The Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute football team was the fourth victim of the Stevens Institute of Technology eleven when they were defeated here this afternoon by a score of 13 to 0. The game was won in the last half by two touchdowns made by Bloss and Ford on end runs.

During the early minutes of play it looked as if it was going to be a difficult proposition for either team to score. Stevens did not outplay the Rensselaer aggregation by a large margin and won only by the speed of Bloss and the unexpected dash made by Ford.

In the first half of the game the Rensselaer fans were treated to a thrill when their eleven came within four yards of scoring. An incompleted forward pass lost them the opportunity and saved the Jerseyites from being scored on. The field was ankle deep with mud, due to the rains of the past week. Many a play was smeared when the men skidded in the slime.

Bloss and Ford made the spectacular plays for the visiting engineers, netting most of the gains. Few forward passes were tried in this game, the teams sticking consistently to line plunging. Carlson and Swenson, the wing men, held down the flank plays of the Scarlet contingent, and made some nice tackles before the opposing backfield men could get their plays under way. Goodale was not in the best of condition and Bajusz started the game in his place and worked well in the combination. When Goodale was sent in later he made large gains through the line and kicked one of the goals. In the first half he tried a drop kick from the 35-yard line, but missed by a few inches.

Bloss made his tally in the third quarter, following a beautiful forward pass from Ford to him which advanced the team thirty yards. Another pass from Ford to Carlson and several line plays brought them within four yards of the line. Bloss grabbed the ball on the next play and whirled around right end for the touchdown. The next touchdown was more or less unexpected. Stevens had the pigskin thirty yards from the goal, following a series of rushes without gains. Ford was signaled around end and galloped down a broken field and over the line. Goodale kicked the goal. The line-up:

POLY PREP ELEVEN WINS.

Defeats New Utrecht High School, 21 to 0—Forward Passes Help.

New Utrecht High School's football team withered before the strong Poly Prep eleven yesterday in their game at Commercial Field, Brooklyn, and suffered a 21 to 0 setback. Three touchdowns by McRae, Bell and Sadler, and a safety gave the Poly Prep lads their victory. Forward passes aided the victorious team, two of the Poly Prep touchdowns coming as a result of the aerial attack. McRae went over the New Utrecht line in the first period after catching a forward pass, and Sadler performed a similar feat in the final quarter.

work by his fatal fumble in the second period. Heinie Miller gave a great exhibition of end-play, and Derr hit the line hard, though never for more than a few yards at a time. Aside from these individual performances, the Pennsylvania team was pretty well swallowed up by the mud and the insistent pugnacity of its opponents.

About 20,000 football fans braved the drizzle, which by game time had assumed the proportions of a steady downpour. Umbrellas were thick in the grandstands, although the collegians themselves disdained to seek protection. Both sides were represented by student bands, whose colorful uniforms were sacrificed in courageous parades before, during, and after the game. The opposing cheer-leaders, also garbed in white, were thoroughly soaked and muddied before half-time had been reached.

The preliminaries were brief. Penn State first sent out its second string players, who curled upon the side lines in blue blankets marked with huge white S's when the 'Varsity later took the field. There was no signal practice, both squads contenting themselves with passing and kicking the ball about until the referee's whistle called them into action.

State won the toss, and Ray Miller kicked off to Higgins who came back five yards. Two assaults on the line failing, the same player punted out of bounds to Pennsylvania's 40-yard line.

Light immediately got away for a 20-yard dash around left end, and after a short gain by Derr, a forward pass to Bell brought the ball five yards nearer. Light tried a drop-kick, which Way fumbled but recovered on his own 5-yard line.

Another Pennsylvania advance began again immediately after Higgins had punted out of danger, and this time Captain Bell, after grounding a long forward pass, failed in another attempt at a field goal.

A third chance for a score came when Haines fumbled a punt and Light recovered the ball on State's 25-yard line. But two rushes and a short forward pass could not produce a first down, and Bell once more missed a drop-kick, the ball going to the left of the goal.

After they had changed ends for the second quarter, Pennsylvania proceeded to make still another bid for a touchdown, Heinie Miller recovering Way's fumble of a punt only nine yards from the goal line. This time the second of two short forward passes went wrong, the ball bouncing out of the arms of Penn's right end into the waiting clutch of Way, who promptly added a 15-yard end run to his timely recovery.

This was the turning point in the game, for the Pennsylvania attack never got started again, whereas Penn State made no more mistakes and grew steadily stronger and more confident, offensively as well as defensively. It was after several exchanges of punts that Higgins sent a long spiral to Bruner on Penn's 30-yard line. The ball bounced out of the hands of the Pennsylvania back and rolled toward the goal-line with the whole field in pursuit. Two successive drives into the mud failed to recover the elusive oval, until finally the huge frame of Conover descended upon it and held it fast, six feet from the last chalk mark. Three times the State backs hurled themselves at the Pennsylvania line, but without covering the short distance. Then, with only one down left, and a foot of ground still to be covered, Robb made the supreme effort and slid across for a touchdown. Higgins punted out to Way, and Cubbage kicked an easy goal.

For the remainder of the half the ball was mostly in Pennsylvania's possession, but a single first down represented the extent of the gains.

The intermission was filled with singing "The Red and the Blue," "Hail, Pennsylvania," and the strangely optimistic "Drink a Highball at Nightfall," being answered by State's one and only chant, the chorus of which was built upon the suggestive words, "Fight, fight, fight."

The team took the hint and the second half was decidedly more of a State affair than the first.

Pearce ran back the kickoff in splendid style and Light and Derr added a first down between them, but Bell followed with a miserably short kick and State was in command of the situation once more. A penalty of fifteen yards for roughing the kicker helped the leaders in keeping their advantage, and a forward pass, Robb to Higgins, resulting in a 25-yard gain, brought the ball within striking distance. Conover tried a place-kick from about thirty-five yards out, but missed. Another short kick by Bell introduced a similar opportunity, and this time Cubbage tried the kick, the ball hitting the upright and bouncing back into the field.

Bell finally got the oval away for a good punt and Way made a clever play by snatching the ball off the ground as both sides crowded around it, being forced out of bounds, after a 15-yard run. The Pennsylvania attack gradually weakened as State kept up its fierce resistance, fumbling and bad passing from the centre breaking up many a play.

The final period began with the good run-back of a punt by Robb, and, after a few short gains, the former Columbia player again threw a forward pass to Higgins, which netted 20 yards. State was penalized for delaying the game, so Conover hastened to kick a placement goal from the 25-yard line. It was the safest play for the occasion, although the State attack was going so well at the time that a second touchdown might have been scored.

With darkness gathering, Pennsylvania made desperate efforts to get the ball clear, but to no avail. A big gain on a punting exchange, aided by Robb's fumble, gave the losers a chance on State's 22-yard line, but bad passing spoiled every attempt at further advance. Haines finally intercepted one and ran to midfield, only to fumble when he was tackled. He made up for it by recovering a Pennsylvania fumble almost immediately, and Robb got away again for 20 yards outside tackle.

The rest was mere guesswork by both sides. Pennsylvania got the ball again, and in a dying attempt Pearce circled the end for a first down. A long forward pass was called back, and Bruner punted over the goal-line. Before the ball could be put in play again, time was called.

CLINTON DEFEATS STUYVESANT, 34-0

Eisenberg and Galbraith Star as Red and Black Eleven Scores Overwhelming Victory.

De Witt Clinton High School's strong football eleven eliminated Stuyvesant H. S. as one of its rivals in the race for the Manhattan-Bronx scholastic football championship yesterday, when the wearers of the Red and Black trounced the east side team in convincing fashion on Dyckman Oval. The Clinton victory was measured by a margin of 34 to 0, but the margin by which the successful team outplayed and outclassed Stuyvesant was considerably greater than this.

The Clinton aggregation possessed a stronger and more experienced line than its rivals. The sport is being revived this year at Stuyvesant after being entirely forgotten during the war period last season. As a result Chick Saltman's youngsters are wanting woefully in many branches of the game, particularly experience. In this essential the Red and Black eleven towered head and shoulders above their raw east side rivals, and the game, therefore, was a battle of a bunch of comparatively raw athletes against a team which contained enough veterans to carry its attack successfully against what seemed like weak efforts by Stuyvesant to stem the onrush.

Though lacking in experience, the east side eleven was not wanting in aggressiveness or combativeness, and it fought grimly and doggedly to the final whistle.

The game was witnessed by 3,000 admirers of the teams who were riotous in their frequent vocal outbursts as the battle progressed. In the final salvo of applause in which followers of both teams joined there was a generous portion of the acclaim heaped on the beaten Stuyvesant eleven by even the Clinton adherents, who appreciated the game battle put up by the vanquished.

Eisenberg and Galbraith Star.

Roy Eisenberg, the Red and Black quarter back, and Captain Nelson Galbraith, full back, led the Clintonians to victory. Consistent marches down the field and three successful forward passes preceded the five Red and Black touchdowns. In the rushing and aerial attack Eisenberg, as slippery in his evasion of frantic Stuyvesant tacklers as the proverbial eel, and Galbraith, like a human steam roller, showed the way. The rest of the players guarded their leaders well, MacAneny, still suffering from injuries, tackling and frustrating would-be Stuyvesant interference, while Brennan, Blumberg, Waterbury, and Payn presented a concerted system which upset all Stuyvesant's defensive plans.

Clinton started a march down the field to the Stuyvesant goal line after an eccentric kick by Galbraith had sailed over the fence and had been called back for another starting kickoff. On the second attempt the ball dropped near Stuyvesant's 25-yard line, and, after it had been pushed back in their efforts to bore through the Red and Black line, Stuyvesant kicked. MacAneny fumbled the ball, but it was recovered on the Clinton 35-yard line, but a series of crashes against the east siders' line, punctuated by short end runs, in which Eisenberg and Galbraith carried the ball, brought the play to Stuyvesant's 15-yard line, from which point Eisenberg raced past Stuyvesant tackles to the first touchdown. Galbraith's toe, true in all four of Clinton's victories this season, kicked the goal. He also sent the pigskin high and true over the crossbar in three succeeding Clinton touchdowns.

After the first touchdown the playing was consistently in Stuyvesant territory. The east siders seldom got the ball in the Red and Black part of the field, for defensively Clinton was as strong as offensively. Stuyvesant resorted to trick plays, and for a time puzzled Bill Cook's boys, especially in the remainder of the opening period and through the second quarter. Clinton's defense, however, quickly rose to the emergency, and the Stuyvesant efforts were turned to naught. The first period ended with Clinton in possession of the ball on Stuyvesant's 28-yard line.

Forward Passes Help.

A 30-yard forward pass, Galbraith to Blumberg, shifted the play close to Stuyvesant's goal line in the second period, and a series of subsequent line plunges brought the Red and Black within a foot of a touchdown. A penalty of five yards was inflicted, but on the next play Galbraith crashed past all opposition and over the line for the second touchdown.

Eisenberg ran Braunlich's kick back to midfield at the start of the second half, and then a forward pass, Galbraith to Blumberg, netted a gain of 25 yards. Brennan and Galbraith both went through the Stuyvesant line for small gains on plunges, but Stuyvesant got the ball on downs within 7 yards of its own goal line. A kick was called for and Braunlich stopped behind the Stuyvesant line for the pass. As the Stuyvesant kicker clasped the ball Payn, who had previously blocked three attempted punts, broke through the line, blocked the kick, and threw himself on the pigskin for Clinton's third touchdown.

Clinton was on the way to another touchdown soon after the start of the final period, when a fumble gave the ball to Stuyvesant on the east siders' 5-yard line. A kick brought the play to the Stuyvesant 40-yard line, but Eisenberg made a run of 15 yards on the first play. On the next play Eisenberg shot a forward pass to Blumberg, who was less than a yard from the Stuyvesant goal line, and another touchdown was registered for Clinton. Shortly before the final whistle Galbraith shot a 15-yard forward pass to Eisenberg, who raced 26 yards for a touchdown. On the punt-out, Galbraith's kick was short and the chance for a goal was lost.

KING O' KINGS "BEST DOG."

Gains Highest Honors in Show of Boston Terrier Club.

The Boston Terrier Club of New York held its twelfth annual specialty show on the roof of the Waldorf-Astoria yesterday, and the exhibition broke all records in the history of the organization. Nearly 150 dogs were benched, the total entries running well above 200, and in every one of the thirty-four classes the competition was exceedingly keen.

Julius C. Feder's King o' Kings was the hero of the day, coming within one point of his championship, although never shown before September of this year, and completing his great record by defeating the finest collection of Boston terriers ever seen in New York for the honor of "best dog in the show." Among his rivals were three champion dogs, Haggerty's King, Peter's Captain, and Dallen's Speedster, of whom the last-named was placed reserve, as well as the winning bitch, Mrs. P. J. Sullivan's Dolly Grand, who had reached her championship in the course of yesterday's event.

Immediately after the show it was announced that Mr. Feder had sold King o' King to Freeman Ford of Pasadena, Ca., for $2,500. The new owner intends to make his new acquisition a champion at the first opportunity and to exhibit him widely throughout the season.

Yesterday's judging was done by a newcomer in Eastern dog circles, B. M. Rosenheim of Chicago, and his alert, efficient methods proved exceedingly popular with exhibitors and spectators alike. Under the competent management of Wilbur H. Purcell, the entire show went off with the greatest smoothness, and bad weather conditions evidently had little effect on the size or enthusiasm of the crowd.

The awards were as follows:

SCHOOLBOYS IN SWIM.

Stuyvesant and Boys' High Win at Evander Childs Natatorium.

Stuyvesant and Boys' High Schools scored victories yesterday in the opening meets of the junior high schools indoor swimming championship tournament conducted by the Public Schools Athletic League in the Evander Childs High School natatorium. Townsend Harris Hall, Evander Childs, and Manual Training High Schools also were credited with victories when they won by forfeit from the three teams which were scheduled to oppose them in dual meets. Bryant, Erasmus Hall, and Curtis teams failed to appear.

Stuyvesant's swimmers trounced the High School of Commerce representatives with comparative ease, the final score favoring the east side lads by 36 points to 17. In a program of six events five Stuyvesant victories were registered, the only Commerce success coming in the fancy dive. Searle won this for Commerce with a total of 26 points. Daniel Lowey was the greatest point scorer for the victorious team, winning the plunge for distance with 51 feet and finishing second to his teammate, Perry, in the 220-yard swim.

The Boys' High-De Witt Clinton meet developed a keen battle which was not decided until the final event had been completed. Boys' victory in the relay, which closed the program, furnished 8 points for the Brooklynites and enabled them to come from behind and beat Clinton by a margin of 28 to 25. Braisted of Boys' High School showed promise as a sprint swimmer in this meet when he carried off the laurels in the 100-yard event in 1:10 4-5.

Australian Tennis Star Here.

Major Arthur W. Heath of Melbourne, Australia, a member of the British Royal Air Forces, and widely known as a lawn tennis player, arrived in New York last night. Major Heath planned originally to come to America with the Australian tennis team that recently played here. He was originally paired with Lycett of the Australian team, but was detained by military duties.

WHITE GOLF WINNER AT CHERRY VALLEY

Defeats Sam Graham, 1 Up, in Final Tournament of the Metropolitan Season.

Gardiner W. White wound up a glorious metropolitan golfing season yesterday afternoon with his best victory of the whole year. He defeated his old rival, the player who has been tracking and trailing him around one course after another, Sam J. Graham of Greenwich, in the final match of the Cherry Valley tournament at Garden City. White had pleasure enough in capturing the final honors in the last event to be played this Fall in the New York district, but he had an added joy in knowing that he teased Graham for a full eighteen holes before shaking him loose. White became dormie one by winning the seventeenth and the pair of metropolitan stars halved the home hole in regulation par figures, ending the match.

Yesterday's weather wasn't quite the most satisfying brand that could have been provided for the finale of 1919 golf hereabouts, but it didn't prevent the full quota of semi-finalists from reporting on time early in the morning and then playing throughout the drizzly, rainy day. Morning matches were fairly well contested, on fast greens and good fairways, but after lunch the course became slower. White and Graham were equal to the task of showing the gallery some really high-class playing, however, and each man lowered considerably the score which Graham took Thursday to win the qualifying medal. The young Nassau golfer went out in the final round in 39 and back in 37 for a 76. Graham needed 41 to reach the turn, but scampered home in 36, one over par, for a total of 77.

Winners in the three other flights came through after almost as brilliant golf. J. D. Standish, Jr., of Detroit took the measure of the home club player, E. B. McKellar, 4 and 2, in the second sixteen. E. H. Driggs, Jr., was the winner of the third flight, overcoming L. W. Hamilton of Englewood, 4 and 3. The honors in the fourth and last sixteen went to Ray Thompson of Englewood, who defeated M. B. Downs of Siwanoy, 4 and 3.

Graham looked especially dark and dangerous at the lunch hour intermission as a result of his victory in the semi-final. He defeated W. W. Pell of Cherry Valley by the especially wide margin of 8 and 7, whereas White scored over E. C. Beall of Uniontown by 5 and 4.

The White-Graham final tussle was a rare treat. White was never down after the first hole, and the gallery had difficulty in picking a winner at all times. Graham won the first hole when the Nassau champion needed five, one stroke over par. White turned the tables at the third and fourth, winning both and going to one up. Four holes in succession were then halved, and White went to two up by taking a birdie 4 at the 455-yard par 5 ninth.

Graham again started well by winning the tenth, which White lost pitilessly by needing six strokes whereas the regulation number is four. White again went to two up by winning the twelfth, but then Graham came in for a share of the breaks. The pride of Greenwich won the thirteenth, four to five, and then followed this with a birdie 3 on the fourteenth, squaring the match. The next two were halved, and the gallery had visions of an extra hole match until White took matters well in hand again at the seventeenth. Graham made only the slightest error when he approached short, but White was quick to take advantage of it. Here he holed out in 4, whereas Graham took 5. This made White dormie one, and he retained his advantage by halving the eighteenth.

Their cards:

White, out	5	4	4	5	4	5	5	4	4	—39
Graham, out	4	4	5	6	4	5	4	4	5	—41

SCARSDALE GOLFERS WIN.

Defeat Columbia Linkmen in Two-Ball Matches and Foursomes.

Scarsdale golfers showed little fear of the Columbia University linksmen yesterday over the Scarsdale Golf Club's links, and won by a total score of 24 to 7. Two-ball matches were played in the morning, in which the collegians were defeated 17 to 5, and in the afternoon round of foursomes the Scarsdale team won by 7 to 2. The point system of scoring was used in each round, one point for each nine holes and one for the match.

Even with the intercollegiate champion, A. L. Walker, Jr., a member of the Columbia team, the collegians were outclassed. Walker won his morning singles tilt against E. E. Sturges, gaining the full allotment of three points, but after lunch the champion, paired with J. Wildberg, lost to Sturges and T. R. Brown by a single point. In the singles the only other Columbia winner was E. L. Rohdenburg, who collected two points. Columbia won only a single match in the foursomes. A Van Raalte and J. DuBois defeated C. C. Hammond and R. C. Burbridge by two points.

TENNIS NOT MAJOR SPORT.

Harvard Student Council Votes Against Awarding "H" to Players.

Keen disappointment was felt at the recent action of the Student Council at Harvard when it voted that it was not in favor of making tennis a major sport and awarding members of the team the "H," but it did favor the securing of a tennis coach for the 'Varsity team and the awarding of an "H" to Harvard men who win the singles or doubles event of the intercollegiate tennis tournament. At the present time, to gain an "H," a Harvard tennis man must win the singles title in the intercollegiate meet.

ERASMUS GAINS THE LEAD.

Brooklyn Harriers Setting Pace in P. S. A. L. Cross-Country Series.

Manhattan and Bronx representatives in the Public Schools Athletic League triangular cross-country running series yesterday were forced to swallow their first complete setback since the hill and dale tests were originated a month ago. Seven schools were entered as representatives of Manhattan and the Bronx in the third of the series of races, held over Poly Prep. School's natural course of about two and one-half miles in the Dyker Heights section of Brooklyn, but not one of the teams came through to victory.

Stuyvesant finished second to Richmond Hill in a race in which Townsend Harris Hall failed to finish a complete team. De Witt Clinton and Morris trailed Flushing in that order. Evander Childs was third to Erasmus Hall and Curtis; Commerce occupied third position to Manual Training and Boys', and Bryant was one of two teams which failed to participate. Erasmus Hall's hill and dalers are now leading in the chase for the championship. The Buff and Blue runners have registered two victories and a second place in the three series conducted. Stuyvesant, Evander Childs, and Manual Training Schools are deadlocked for second laurels, each having scored one victory and a brace of second places.

Robert Zulsbach of Flushing High School, earned the distinction of leading home the pack of more than 100 athletes who competed in the four group races conducted. Zulsbach and Jimmy Hart of DeWitt Clinton H. S., had a stiff struggle over the trying course. The battle ended with the Clintonian weakening in the final stages of the race, while Zulsbach continued at an even pace and crossed the finish line first with an advantage of about twenty yards on Hart. The Flushing lad's time was 12 minutes 30 seconds, the fastest of the day, while Hart was six seconds slower. Albert Tracy, Flushing's crack cross-country runner, finished third in this race and fifth in the pack, for W. De Lano, Richmond Hill, and P. Jerman, Stuyvesant, first and second, respectively, in the Richmond Hill-Stuyvesant-Townsend Harris Hall race, both led Tracy over the line.

The battle between De Lano and Jerman was the keenest of the day, the Richmond Hill runner winning first position only after a final effort in which he summoned all his strength to beat off Jerman's challenge in the last few strides. The spurt gave De Lano first position by the margin of one second, and enabled the Richmond Hill team to nose out Stuyvesant in the team score, 26 to 29.

Marvin Rick, scholastic cross-country champion, crossed the line the winner of the Erasmus Hall-Curtis-Evander Childs race. Rick finished sixth in the pack, his time being 12:55.

Elsner of Manual Training H. S. was the victor in the other race, in which Manual Training defeated Commerce and Boys' H. S. Elsner covered the distance in 13:04.

GOLF AT FOX HILLS.

Stratton Gets Net Prize for New York A. C. Tourney—Other Matches

Major H. L. Stratton of Siwanoy was adjudged the winner yesterday of the low net prize in connection with the recent New York A. C. golf tourney. When the handicap round was contested on Oct. 23 a tie of 72 among three linksmen resulted in the fight for the net prize. The play-off was not held until yesterday, over the Fox Hills course on Staten Island. Stratton clicked off a 95, 18—77, M. J. Grammont of the home club took a 96, 16—80, and Wesley M. Oler, Jr., unattached, had 94, 11—83.

The club matches at Fox Hills for the prizes offered by Arthur E. Dawson resulted in ties yesterday. The tourney was played with three-quarters handicap against bogey. In the Class A division, E. T. Villareal, J. M. Brander, and E. G. B. Riley finished 2 up. In the lower group, George S. Scofield, H. H. Lloyd, and J. R. Percival also were 2 up on bogey. Class A brought out thirty-one contestants, and there were thirty-four in the Class A division.

BILLY KELLY LEADS FAST FIELD HOME IN SERIAL WEIGHT FOR AGE RACE ON PIMLICO TRACK

LUCULLITE BEATEN AS PIMLICO OPENS

DOMINIQUE FIGHTS GAMELY

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 1.—Splashing through a veritable sea of mud the fleet Billy Kelly and his young stable mate, Constancy, both owned by Commander J. K. L. Ross, took the measure of Sam C. Hildreth's great racer Lucullite, among others, here today in the first of the serial handicaps for all ages which was the feature for the opening day at Pimlico. The Ross entry finished one, two, the Dick Welles gelding just getting up in the last few strides to take the decision from Constancy by a nose. The Beach Stable's Flags was third, nearly a length in front of Lucullite, while Vice Chairman, a juvenile, was last.

Billy Kelly ran a powerful race and was at home in the sloppy going, while Lucullite was badly handled by Fator, and, besides, did not seem to like the condition of the track.

The opening at Pimlico, with its promising card for the inaugural, brought out what was almost a capacity crowd, and except for the fact that it began to rain early in the day the plant would undoubtedly have been taxed to the limit. As it was, there was little comfort for those who jammed their way into the inclosure, for the rain fell so hard during the racing that all tried to get under the cover of the main stands and the crush became so great that the police could not handle it. The aisles and stairways were so completely blocked that passage through them was impossible.

Despite the crush, the crowding, and the rain those present had a good day of sport as far as the racing was concerned. The high-class horses made their appearance for the first time in the week, and the card bristled with stake events.

Gala Day for Ross.

It was a triumphant day for Commander Ross, for not only did his horses finish one, two in the feature of the day, but his Boniface was an easy winner of the Arlington Purse, in which he defeated Fairy Wand and Lord Brighton, among others. Ross and Hildreth, owners of the two most powerful racing stables in the country, matched racers throughout the day, and Ross scored twice to once for Hildreth. The only victory for the Hildreth stable came in the fifth race, in which Dominique proved to be many pounds the best and defeated a big field of two-year-olds with one of his most brilliant performances. Among his victims was Commander Ross's His Choice.

Billy Kelly earned his victory cleanly in the feature event and was the best under the conditions. The surprise of the race, besides the manner in which Lucullite ran, was the excellent performance of Constancy. This youngster led all the way to the last hundred feet and it took a smart ride by Loftus to get Billy Kelly in front at the finish.

Although Lucullite has proved his ability over the six furlong route as well as at greater distances, he has about convinced his owner that he cannot run in the kind of mud that exists on the Maryland tracks. This was his second defeat in his Maryland campaign, both races being run in the mud, and today he showed a distinct dislike for the going. On the other occasion he had been kicked while at the post and his poor showing was attributed to that accident. Today he suffered no mishaps of that character, but he was poorly ridden by Fator. The jockey got the horse into a pocket three different times in the short distance and had to take up with him each time. Although Lucullite was off in good shape he was soon last and his best efforts were unavailing after that.

Constancy on which Sande had the mount, got a flying start and was in the lead from the very beginning, with Flags second and Lucullite third. Lucullite was on the rail, and when Fator rushed up with him in the first sixteenth he found himself blocked and had to take up. By this time Billy Kelly had come along on the outside, and was abreast of him, and when Fator tried to go to the outside he found himself blocked again. His second effort to pull up brought Lucullite back to next to last, where Vice Chairman was trailing along. Fator got clear, but Lucullite had a lot of mud splashed in his face by this time and he did not seem to relish it. He did not run like the same horse which had amazed racegoers in New York. Fator rode him into still another pocket near the last turn, though at that time the horse was hopelessly out of it.

Constancy Loses Out at the Wire.

Constancy showed an amazing flight of speed under her light impost of 108 pounds and opened up a lead of two lengths which she retained until she was on the home stretch. There Billy Kelly began to do his best and under a hard drive he got up close to the leader. From the sixteenth pole to the finish the stablemates raced together, and the older one finally proved the better by a nose. Flags had plenty of speed, but carried 130 pounds and found it too much against horses of that class. Lucullite was gaining on him in the stretch, but Flags managed to save third place. Vice Chairman, which has run only two or three times, made a good effort, but was outclassed.

S. C. Hildreth's Dominique ran what was by far the most impressive race of the day in the fifth event, the Pikesville purse for two-year-olds at six furlongs. This race brought out eight starters. Dominique went to the post an odds-on favorite, and proved that he is an exception to the sons of Peter Quince, which are so often accused of being quitters. He ran a game race, being left at the post and coming from behind to take the decision by a narrow margin after making up more than a dozen lengths.

Fator seemed to bungle all his rides today, and when the barrier went up for the Juvenile event Dominique was standing flatfooted. The others got away nicely, but he was far back of the bunch when he got into motion. There was a groan from the stands, as he carried most of the support, but Fator made no more mistakes, and the horse proved that he outclassed his field. He began to move on the outside, and before he reached the first turn he was third. Right Over Might, which was running his second race, was out in front and setting a terrific pace for such a track. As he came around the bend it seemed that he had the race won unless he tired badly, for he was half a dozen lengths in front.

Fator gained the rail at the turn, saved some ground, and Dominique could be seen moving up with a tremendous show of speed. He dashed through the stretch and caught Right Over Might at the sixteenth pole and won by a length and a half. Right Over Might was eight lengths in front of Hasten On, which took third, and that distance indicates how much the best Dominique was.

Donnaconna Easy Winner.

G. W. Loft's Donnaconna, which has finally rounded into form, was an easy winner in a field of two-year-old maidens in the first race at six furlongs. He beat Armistice and Fairway among others and gained the decision by two lengths after leading all the way from the barrier. H. P. Whitney's Pitter Patter, making its initial start, ran a good race and was fifth after being next to last to leave the barrier.

The Sudbrook Handicap for mares and fillies went to Sam Lewis's Dottie Vandiver, which came from behind to win in the stretch drive from Elected II. and Frizeur, the latter the favorite. Elected II. set a fast pace, but was not good enough to hold Dottie Vandiver when the test came. However, Elected II. fought it out with Frizeur for the place and gained it by a length.

The inaugural steeplechase had five starters but only three finished and the race went to H. W. Maxwell's Decisive, which won by a head from Weldship. Blankenburg was third, fifty lengths back. Pastora and Prince Hal II. fell. Weldship was well out in the lead for the first turn of the field but Cheyne kept within striking distance with Decisive at all times and when he was ready to challenge on the last turn he had little trouble moving to first place. Weldship fenced nicely but was tiring at the end and could not increase his speed. He made a game effort and the two horses were neck and neck after coming over the last jump on almost equal terms.

The Belvidere Purse, for three-year-olds, at a mile and an eighth, went to W. L. S. Martin's Bridesman, which scored an easy victory over Clean Gone, with Sailor, the only other starter, last. Bridesman rushed into a long lead at the start and was never in danger. Clean Gone found the weight, 118 pounds, too much for the distance, and could never get up to the leader. Bridesman had five lengths to spare at the finish, while Clean Gone took the place by three lengths.

J. K. L. Ross's Boniface was an equally easy winner in the last race, at a mile and a sixteenth, and beat Fairy Wand by six lengths, while Lord Brighton was beaten for the place by half a length. The Hildreth horse was a strong favorite, but he did not appear to like the muddy track. Boniface took the lead at the first turn and just walked off with the race. Fairy Wand made one effort at the last turn and then trailed in. Lord Brighton never threatened the leader.

JACK HARE, JR., IS HANDICAP WINNER

Captures Camp Knox Fixture at Churchill Downs—Midway Wins Louisville Cup.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 1.—Jack Hare, Jr., was the hero of the getaway day card at Churchill Downs this afternoon. W. E. Applegate's fine son of Marathon captured the Camp Knox Handicap with supreme ease, handling his burden of 137 pounds as if it had been a feather, and negotiating the six furlongs in heavy going without a sign that it was anything except a breather for him. He was eased up at the end to win by a length and a half from Top Coat in 1:15 3-5. Both his margin of victory and the time could have been improved considerably if Lunsford, who had the mount, had felt disposed.

Jack Hare, Jr., was away from the barrier in fair position and was kept well up with the pace throughout the early stages. At the three furlong mark Lunsford let him down a bit, and he drew clear of the field and took up a position a length behind Top Coat, which was making the pace. At the head of the stretch Lunsford let out another notch, and his mount, full of running, passed the pacemaker easily and was never thereafter headed or even approached. Rifle captured the show money without difficulty. Jack Hare, Jr., was the favorite in the betting, a $2 ticket on him returning $5.90.

The Louisville Cup, $5,000 added, fell to the favorite, Midway, Ballot's chestnut son from the stable of J. W. Parrish. The field was reduced by scratches to four starters, only one of which proved able to offer opposition to the winner. This was Stockwell, which, well ridden by Van Dusen, led until the final half furlong and appeared the probable winner, but tired at the very close and could not withstand the determined challenge of Midway. Regalo and Raider, the other starters, were beaten off.

The Camp Taylor Handicap for two-year-olds, over the mile distance went to the second choice, Dresden, which barely nosed out the favorite, Prince Pal, in a whirlwind finish. Dresden, well handled by Thurber, moved up steadily after a slow beginning, and, coming with a rush in the final sixteenth, overhauled Prince Pal fifty yards from the wire. The latter was raced into exhaustion in the first six furlongs and had only his gameness wherewith to stand off his challenge. He tried hard, nevertheless, but Dresden's nose, once in front, was maintained there until the finish.

KING HORSE AT HIS BEST.

Thoroughbreds in All Classes to be Seen in National Show.

Prominence will be given to the thoroughbred, in classes to halter, of chief interest to breeders, as saddle horses, hunters and jumpers, and as polo mounts, at the National Horse Show, in Madison Square Garden, from Nov. 17 to 21, to raise a free-will gift to the Salvation Army of a sum to equal the entire gross receipts.

The thoroughbred strain in horses, as in the case of the foxhound in dogs, improves every other breed with which it is crossed and never works deterioration, which is why in judging the class for stallions first consideration will be given by the judge, John E. Madden, master of Hamburg Place, Ky., to appearance in the ring and ability to improve the breed of horses for general use. Racing performances are not regarded.

This stallion class has five entries—Mrs. F. J. Van der Beck's imported bay, Allumeur, by Sir Meddler, bred at Clarence H. Mackay's French stud; J. Macy Willet's Cassilis Farm entry, Uncas Chief; Mrs. W. Austin Wadsworth's Uncle George, sire of many hunters in the Genesee Valley; Harry W. Knight's Ellisdale, by Watercress-La Primura, bred by J. B. Haggin, and Oyama, a Commando horse, bred by James R. Keene and entered by Troop K, New York State troops. Uncas Chief, Uncle George, and Allumeur are also in the class for sires of thoroughbred race horses.

The class for thoroughbred saddle horses, with pedigrees registered in the stud book, has twelve entries, but scores more of the horses that will be ridden in the ring will be half or three quarter bred. Among the nominations are Harvey S. Ladew's Leading Lady, raced last Winter in Cuba; Miss Belle W. Baruch's Kershaw, George H. Chipchase's Ben Dale, and Miss Janice Liggett's Kitty Quince and Shrovetide, also entered in hunter classes.

There are twenty entries in the class for thoroughbred registered hunters. The pure-blooded stock is steadily increasing in favor with American riders to hounds. No other horse can so well stand the pace now set by the packs and fence perfectly up to the last ounce of its endurance. The half-bred and even the three-quarter bred, as soon as they begin to tire, begin to bungle their fences.

Lieut. Col. Herbert C. Cox of Enniscare Farm, Oakville, Canada, has no less than five thoroughbred hunters in, among them Indian Arrow, a champion at the recent Rochester horse show. Isaac H. Clothier, Jr., has entered the Pennsylvania champion, Sir Linsin; Miss Constance Vauclain, Arbite; Miss Lida Louise Fleitmann, Golden Duck; Thomas J. Regan, Pretender, a six-year-old bay, by Hamburg-Sally of Navarre, bred by H. P. Whitney; Charles D. Lanier, the champion lightweight hunter of last year's show, Down East, by Yankee-Tarentella, and bred by John E. Madden, while Miss Carol Smith of Oakville, Toronto, Canada, one of the best feminine riders across country in the Dominion, has entered a big thoroughbred named Ondrenton.

CORNELL HARRIERS WIN.

Defeat Harvard Cross Country Team by Score of 42 to 64.

Special to The New York Times.

BELMONT, Mass., Nov. 1.—Cornell defeated Harvard, 42 to 64, at cross country here this afternoon in one of a series of races which resumed the proportions of an intercollegiate cross-country meet. In the other contests New Hampshire State beat the strong M. I. T. aggregation by a score of 23 to 32, and the Harvard freshmen defeated the M. I. T. freshmen, 21 to 46.

Before two miles had been covered, T. C. McDermott, Cornell's star, had forced his way to the front, and at two and one-half miles was leading Burnham Lewis, the Crimson's best entry, by about five yards. By the time the four-mile mark was reached he was thirty yards in front of Lewis, who, in turn, had increased his lead over his nearest opponent to about fifty yards. The Cornell leader forged steadily ahead and broke the worsted more than 160 yards in advance of the second man when the approximately six miles of the course had been covered. Meanwhile, Campbell of Cornell had left the pack far behind, gained steadily on Lewis and in a nerve-testing brush for the tape passed the Crimson leader and captured second by about five yards.

The winner's time, 32 minutes and 23 3-5 seconds, was only fair, being more than a minute behind the record for the Belmont course, set some years ago by the late Johnny Overton of Yale.

The point summary:

Cornell	1	3	4	5	6	11	12	—42
Harvard	2	7	8	9	10	13	15	—64

Score Victory Over Yale Cross-Country Team, 19 to 41.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 1.—Princeton's cross-country team defeated the Yale harriers over the five-and-a-half-mile course in Princeton today by the decisive score of 19 to 41. Julian Swede of Princeton won the individual honors, completing the race twenty yards ahead of Rogers, a teammate, in the good time of 27 minutes and 45 seconds, with Captain Forseman of Princeton third. Princeton runners won seven out of the first ten places, and the first five Orange and Black harriers had finished before the third Yale man crossed the line. Reed, the Yale Captain, took the lead at the start, but Swede set the pace at the two-mile mark and was never headed from that point. This was Princeton's first victory over the Blue in cross-country running.

ADAMS TO COACH ITALIANS.

Noted Jumper Will Prepare Athletes for 1920 Olympiad.

Platt Adams, former New York A. C. athlete, who won the Olympic standing high jump championship and finished runner-up for the broad jump title in the last international classic held in Stockholm in 1912, has been appointed coach of the Italian team which will compete in the revival of the Olympic Games at Antwerp next year. This announcement was made yesterday by the Y. M. C. A., following receipt of a cable from the Italian Olympic officials, announcing the appointment of the former Mercury Foot star. Adams will sail for Italy the latter part of this month.

Adams's selection was made from a number of prominent track and field experts who had been under consideration for the position. The Italian Olympic Committee some time ago requested the Y. M. C. A. to select the man best suited to prepare Italy's athletes for the coming games, and Adams's name was submitted for the berth. Yesterday's cable accepting Adams ended the negotiations, and the announcement followed.

Adams will reach Italy well equipped for his new duties. In addition to the experience gained in years of competitive activity, during which he annexed thirty-eight championships, the former New York A. C. jumper will have the added knowledge which he gained through his part in the preparation of the American Expeditionary Forces athletes for the recent inter-allied games, conducted at the Pershing Stadium near Paris. Adams went abroad in July, 1918, as a Y. M. C. A. athletic director, and did good work while with Uncle Sam's doughboys in France. To his coaching, in a measure, was due the overwhelming success registered by the American fighters over their allied brethren.

Adams's amateur athletic career ended several years ago when the A. A. U. adopted a rule prohibiting athletes from capitalizing their athletic ability. With Edward L. Emes of the Bronx Church House Adams was investigated and disqualified for his connection with a sporting goods firm. During his career Adams was regarded as one of the greatest jumpers ever developed in this country.

Baseball Briefs.

Billy Lane of Oakland was the speed boy of the Pacific Coast League during the 1919 season. Lane batted only .250, but he managed to pilfer sixty-one bases during the season.

The Chicago White Sox have been invited to do their 1920 training in five different cities. The bidding began when it was announced that there was a possibility of Owner Comiskey passing up Mineral Wells, Texas, where the club has trained for several years.

A rise in the player limit and also in the salary limit of the American Association is being predicted for 1920. In view of the success of the various clubs during the last season, such a move seems likely. The owners were doubtful about the comeback of the game when they made their plans for 1919.

The 1919 season was a banner one for Pat Moran, financially as well as professionally. Pat got a good salary for leading the Reds, drew down about $5,200 as his world's series share, then was presented with $5,000 as a bonus for winning the pennant and world's series, and later got $1,000 more from admiring friends of his home city, Fitchburg, Mass.

Walter Holke, former first baseman of the Giants, has entered the employ of a moving picture concern at St. Louis. Ferdie Schupp, another ex-Giant, also has obtained employment in St. Louis for the Winter.

Statistics on the work of the Cleveland Indians during the last season show that Larry Gardner was the most timely hitter during the season, driving eighty-nine runs over the plate. Tris Speaker, though he hit under .300, was next in line.

There is some talk of the Eastern League adopting the bonus system that proved so popular in the American Association during the last year. The plan consists in taking 1 cent from each admission and turning it into a players' pool, to be divided at the close of the season according to the standing of the clubs.

Connie Mack expects to leave during the coming week for Texas to pick out a training camp for his Athletics next Spring. Mack took his team to San Antonio in 1913, but for the next five years he stuck to Florida. Last Spring he trained at home.

The Cleveland Indians worked the squeeze play successfully eighteen times during the 1919 season. In exactly half of these attempts the batsman reached first base, besides driving a run over the plate.

A ball players' quartet has been formed in California, the members being Krause of Oakland, Alcock of Vernon, and Koerner and Scott of San Francisco. The quartet is booked for several weeks in theatres of the Pacific Coast League cities.

BOHLAND DEFEATED IN TWO-MILE RACE

Makes Fast Time, but Finds Handicap Too Liberal in Meet at 47th Regiment Armory.

Max Bohland of the Paulist A. C., national cross-country running champion, failed in his attempt to redeem liberal handicaps in the games of the 47th Regiment in the Brooklyn army last night. In defeat, however, the fleet-footed Winged P athelete recorded his fastest indoor two-mile race in years. Bohland, starting from scratch with Sid Leslie, the old Long Island A. C. runner, and Nick Giannakopulos, the sturdy Greek runner of the Millrose A. A., summoned his reserve strength in a closing effort in the last half-mile and just managed to take third prize from Al Hulsebosch, a clubmate, who was allowed a start of 100 yards. Bohland's time was 9:46 3-5.

Harry Wigger, another Paulist runner, carried off the premier prize. Wigger started with an allowance of 100 yards and took the lead at about the one and one-half mile mark. Thereafter Wigger's flying heels showed in front and he won by a margin of five yards from George Cornetta, who was making his first competitive appearance as a member of the New York A. C. Cornetta had a 75-yard allowance. Wigger's time was 9:42 2-5.

The three scratch starters remained bunched for the first mile, with Bohland and Leslie running almost shoulder to shoulder. The sturdy little Paulist distance runner spurted after passing the mile mark, in an effort to shake off Leslie and Giannakopulos. Bohland's plan was successful as far as it concerned the Greek, but Leslie stuck to his rival until Bohland slackened his pace. A half mile further on Bohland again hit up a fast clip, and this time Leslie found the effort of keeping stride with his rival too great. Sid started gradually to drop back, while Bohland went out in pursuit of the leaders. At the finish Leslie was in fifth position. Giannakoupulos retired at one and one-half miles.

Jack Eller of the Loughlin Lyceum, former national champion hurdler, competed successfully from scratch in a 75-yard handicap hurdle event, winning convincingly in 9 2-5 seconds. Eller gradually gained ground on his rivals until he reached the fifth hurdle, when he went to the front and won by two yards. Charles Erdman, Jr., of Princeton, intercollegiate champion, was another scratch competitor, but in the final heat the Tiger athlete kicked himself and was eliminated.

Jimmy O'Brien of the Loughlin Lyceum, local and Canadian middle-distance champion, was on scratch against a field of twenty-eight rivals in a 600-yard handicap run, but found the task of prying his way through the big field too great. O'Brien finished fourth. H. Battcher of the Mohawk A. C., with a handicap of twenty-seven yards, won the race.

Company K's first team showed the greatest stamina in a two-mile hike for members of the Forty-seventh, which carried the competitors out into the rain and over muddy and sloppy ground.

The meet ushered in the local indoor season and was well attended. The performances were of a high order, close finishes ruling in a number of interesting battles on the board floor.

Cousins Tied in Tournament.

Robert Steinbugler defeated his cousin, Charley Steinbugler, in a Kings County handicap balk-line billiard match at the National Recreation Academy in Brooklyn last night by a score of 150 to 140. The winner made a high run of 38, while Charley made a high run of 44. They are tied for first place in the tourney and will play it off on Monday night.

HODKINSON WINS TROPHY.

Captures Travers Island Cup in First New York A. C. Shoot of Season.

Although the day was anything but ideal for shooting, thirty-two gunners of the New York Athletic Club reported at the Travers Island traps for the first regular shoot of the season yesterday.

The high scratch gunner was E. B. Anderson who had 96 out of a possible 100 targets. A half dozen gunners tied for the high handicap prizes. As it was growing dark, no attempt was made to shoot off the trophy. The Travers Island Cup was won by S. M. Hodkinson. Legs were won on the Haslin Club and Monthly Cups by all gunners with full totals of 25 targets.

W. B. Ogden won the special scratch shoot and also the ghost trophy event. The shoot for the Buermeyer Cup ended in a tie between E. D. Anderson and F. H. Hering. Each had 49 out of a possible 50 targets.

The winners: Travers Island Cup, S. M. Hodkinson; high scratch prize, E. D. Anderson; special cup, W. B. Ogden; ghost trophy, W. B. Ogden; Buermeyer Cup, legs scored by Anderson and Hering; High Handicap and Special Handicap Cups, to be shot off; legs on Haslin Club, and Monthly Cups scored by all gunners with 25 targets.

CRESCENT TEAM LOSES.

Soccerites Beaten by Montclair Eleven—Other Games.

Meeting the Crescent A. C. soccer eleven at home yesterday afternoon, the team of the Montclair A. C. scored a notable victory by 4 to 2 in the Field Club League championship series. The Crescents did well enough during the early part of the game and led at half time by 1 to 0, but had a bad spell in the second half, when the home team piled up three goals in succession.

Soccer elevens representing the Staten Island Football Club and the Bensonhurst Field Club met in a Field Club League fixture at Manor Field, West New Brighton, yesterday, and the result was a draw at one goal for each side, both being shot in the first half.

Tie games were the rule in the seventh round of the annual P. S. A. L. soccer championships between the various high school teams yesterday. The Evander Childs players, who are trailing the leaders closely, traveled over to Brooklyn to encounter Bushwick at Prospect Park and lost a little ground through a 1 to 1 tie.

Manual Training and De Witt Clinton soccers also clashed at Prospect Park and the result was a tie score at 1 to 1. Both goals were shot in the second period.

Erasmus Hall, after leading by 2 to 1 in the first half, had to be content with a 2 to 2 tie against Richmond Hill in the P. S. A. L. championship game at Brooklyn Athletic Field yesterday.

MONMOUTH RIDERS IN CHASE

Follow Hounds for 14 Miles in Pursuit Over Rough Country.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., Nov. 1.—A large number of riders followed the Monmouth County hounds today over stiff hunting country in Holmdel Township. It was raining most of the afternoon, making the going heavy. The hounds were cast in on the Joseph Holmes estate at Holmdel, running fast over the Holmes and Brady farms and checking on Cemetery Road. After a rest the hounds were again started and ran over hilly country, the riders encountering many ditches and high fences. The finish was at Crawford's Corner after the riders had covered about fourteen miles.

POLO GROUNDS MAY HAVE CYCLE TRACK

Evening Racing a Possibility Next Season—Matty Compares Ages with Kramer.

By CHRISTY MATHEWSON.

The other day I was in the offices of the New York club and John McGraw came in with Frank Kramer, the bicycle rider. They had been out at the Polo Grounds looking the field over with the idea of installing a collapsible track there on which bicycle races could be held in the evenings next Summer, the track to be folded up and tucked away under the stands during the ball game.

"How old are you, Frank?" I asked the bicycle racing champion.

"Thirty-nine," he answered, "and I am still riding. When did you first start playing big league ball?" he asked me.

"In 1900," I replied.

"I have a four years' edge on you, then. I began riding in the big bicycle races in 1896, when I was sixteen years old."

I looked him over. Here seemed to be a living contradiction of the first rule of sport—"that youth will be served." At thirty-nine he was still a champion at one of the hardest games on the heart and lungs ever invented. I always figure an athlete is only as old as his heart and lungs. I am younger than Kramer, and I am entirely out of baseball now as an active participant. Arthur Irwin, the old baseball man, was in the New York offices at the time and listened to our talk. Then he spoke up:

"That bicycle riding is a hard game," he declared. "I used to follow it a little, and I remember how the trainers threw pills to the riders for the last lap. These were dynamited with dope. Remember, Frank?"

"Yes," responded Kramer.

I marveled at the vitality of the man who could stand that game as long as Kramer had and was planning his next season at 40 years. He then resumed talking with McGraw about the night races next Summer at the Polo Grounds, of which he will have charge if the plan goes through.

This talk with Kramer made me think of the great ball players who had come and gone before they were 39 years old. I know good, wise baseball men that saw Eddie Collins work in this last series who believe he is slowing up—losing some of his glistening speed and brightness of eye. These were National Leaguers who had not watched his play for a year or more. Up to the last two games his batting average was very bad; then he recovered a little ground.

Personally, I would not want to go on record as saying that Collins had begun to slow up, but I will say he did not look like the same second baseman to me in this series that he was when I last saw him in action. He might have had a bad stretch when things didn't break for him.

Collins is just beyond 31 years old, and has always taken the greatest care of himself. He has never been a drinker, not even of the occasional sort, and does not smoke. He leads the life of an athlete. He should, on the dope, have many good years in him yet, and still wise baseball men think he is coming toward the end. I don't know.

There must be a wear and tear in baseball not apparent on the surface. Few men last in the big leagues beyond forty—very few. Old Honus Wagner is one of the greatest examples of a veteran who lived in the leagues past that age, and in the last few years of his baseball life he was not the same old Dutchman.

Honus, it might interest some of the readers to know, is living down in Carnegie, Penn., now on the money he made in baseball. When he was in the game, he used to buy a house with his savings, as they accumulated, so that when he finished he had quite a flock of houses. Now he is a landlord, and living on this income.

Wagner wanted to quit for a couple of years before he finally took off the spangles, but the Pittsburgh Club would not let him. No matter how hard he tried, you could see the big Dutchman gradually settling back and slowing up. I remember one game, toward the end of his career, when he let a couple of balls get past him that he would have eaten up in the old days.

"Old Honus is going," lamented McGraw on the bench. "I hate to see it. But he's not covering the ground he did, and his eye is not so good. He can't come through with the hits when they are needed the way he used to. I feel sorry for him."

I looked at the old gray-thatched giant out there, and I felt sorry, too.

I said to Frank Kramer the other day: "There is no need to feel sorry for you, because you can still deliver, but we are all getting to the age where putting a big strain on heart and lungs means the shortening of our lives, and that we will ultimately wind up with hardening of the arteries."

Once, for a short time, I took a flier in the life insurance business during the Winter. I attended a luncheon of life insurance agents in Newark during this period, and I asked one of the medical examiners why baseball players were charged a higher rate than other risks.

"Well, they're harder to get a line on," he answered.

Then he backed and filled some more, and finally admitted it was the danger of hardening of the arteries from the steady and violent exercise which caused insurance companies to consider them more hazardous risks.

"You fellows ought to watch all college oarsmen, then," I told him. "After they get out of college and become lawyers and brokers and so on, you insure them and forget they were oarsmen."

"That's a good suggestion," he agreed. "I will make a note of it."

And he did.

Few fans and players knew the big, silent, sphinx-like Dutchman well. He was one of the decentest men ever in baseball. I recall I slid into his spikes on a forced play at second base several years ago. He was probably trying to block me off, and Wagner's spikes scratched me a little.

I was pretty sore, and I looked around to say something to him to make him appreciate how irritated I was, although it was probably as much my fault as his. Honus was silently rubbing his foot where I had skidded into it.

"I'm sorry, Matty," he said. "Did I cut you?"

"That's all right," I told him.

What else could I say?

If it had been Fred Clarke or Joe Kelley or almost any other player than the big mild-mannered Dutchman, I would probably have said something different.

Seven years ago I wrote an article in which I said I could tell whether Wagner was trying to hit to right field by watching his feet. Of course, with a runner on second, a hit to right gives him a better chance to score. Honus was a terrific left field hitter, if he got a ball on the inside of the plate, so it was bad judgment to give him one there, unless he shifted his feet to try to push it to right. He had a habit of stepping straight out with his left foot and dragging back his right a little, just as a pitcher let go of the ball, when a punch to right would help the play. After reading this article of mine, the Pittsburgh fans for a couple of years used to ride me regularly every time Wagner came to bat.

"Watch his feet!" they'd yell.

One day I saw him shift just as I was delivering the ball, and pitched to him on the inside. He caught the ball on the handle of the bat but the strength of his forearms did something that I don't believe any other man in baseball could have done. He poled a high fly which landed in the right field stands for a home run. On a deeper field, it would have been an easy out. Then from all over the crowd came the call:

"Watch his feet!"

Ship by Truck

The Force Behind the Symbol

Belief in the future of the truck as an efficient, economical mode of transportation has long been dominant in the Firestone program.

To instill this belief in the public mind and broaden it in industrial and commercial circles, Firestone inaugurated the "Ship by Truck" movement and contributed the symbol shown here.

The idea expressed in this emblem, "Ship by Truck," has met with quick acceptance. It symbolizes the vision and business faith of all motor truck interests. It is a direct notice to all shippers that the truck industry has taken its right place as a big element in transportation.

Guided along sound business lines and placed on a substantial, practical footing, motor truck express lines serving farmers and neighboring communities are now established and operating successfully as allies of the railroads.

Without the motor truck today, the delivery systems of our big cities would break down completely. And in the modern industrial field the motor truck is as essential to production as the plant machinery itself.

"Ship by Truck" is the slogan that has common significance for all these interests and for the public at large. The force behind the symbol is an awakening appreciation in all quarters of the truck's value in solving the nation's problems of distribution.

The Firestone Ship by Truck Bureaus, with headquarters at Akron, are in operation in the principal cities, to serve all interests as a clearing house of information and promotion.

The Firestone Bureau here wants to serve you. It wants to help this city and vicinity to be among the first to prove all the advantages of "Ship by Truck"—and to reap the benefits.

Whether you are a shipper or a truck operator, a motor express man or a local transfer man, a truck distributor or a tire dealer, the Firestone Bureau is at your service.

Firestone TIRES

There is a Firestone Tire for every load, road and condition of service

To the Wage Earner

Are you a good American Citizen?

Are you an honest-to-goodness Tax Payer?

BE ONE and Make and Save Money

Joseph P. Day

The best and safest way to make money, to practice thrift, is to own a little piece of the United States,—your country.

The best place to buy a lot is in the Hunts Point district of the East Bronx, immediately adjoining one of the most congested and best improved residential and business sections of New York.

If you were born abroad, tell the folks back home that you own a part of the United States, a part of the Great City of New York.

Let that be your answer to charges of "radicalism."

No man will dare then to say you are not a decent American, a good citizen.

Buy a lot, and build on it.

Don't be a rent-payer always.

That is letting "the other fellow" get the credit for paying the taxes, which you really pay, with a profit besides.

Pay the rent to yourself, and save money.

To the Great "Middle" Class

Take some of the profits you have earned from your business and buy a few of these lots cheap for yourself and your children.

Let this lesson in thrift be your answer to the propaganda of the radical "reds," who have no supporters among property owners and good, responsible citizens in AMERICA.

The Hunts Point section has fine transit facilities, is well built up, and has an overflowing population of hardworking, thrifty men and women. Your money is safe there, and will be well invested.

To the Wealthy Investor

THIS IS AN AGE OF DEMOCRACY.
THROW IN YOUR LOT WITH THE WAGE EARNER.
BUY LAND WHERE THEY BUY IT.
BUY LAND WHERE THE MASSES ARE GOING, in great crowds, to live.
BUILD "model" houses for them.

This is the way you can show yourself to be a good citizen, and encourage the investment of the savings of the great American public in real estate, which is the BASIS OF ALL SECURITY.

Help to save this country from the evils of "Radicalism" by giving the investing people good, sanitary houses and factories.

Forest Hills Gardens

FIFTEEN MINUTES FROM PENN. STATION

LAND is the most secure of all investments, therefore it is called, in contradistinction to other types of investment, REAL ESTATE.

TRANSPORTATION and accessibility are the fundamental principles that enhance the value of REAL ESTATE. Improved transportation has brought Forest Hills Gardens within fifteen minutes of the centre of Manhattan.

BUILDING operations have been resumed. The increased cost of building is offset by the low price of the land. Many people are purchasing plots and having plans prepared. Our belief that prices are staple—even though higher than pre-war prices—is confirmed by the fact that the SAGE FOUNDATION HOMES CO. is at present building 25 houses, costing over three-quarters of a million dollars. We urge upon those contemplating owning a home the early selection of a building site.

THE REAL ESTATE business is in a better position now than at any time since 1907, therefore land prices are sure to increase.

ZIEGLER ESTATE SALE.

Buyers to be Financed in Building Homes.

That the trend to the suburbs which has been manifest for several years past has gained increased momentum of late is attested by the fact that there is an acute shortage of homes in the outlying sections of the metropolis.

The various development companies who had the courage to undertake new construction since the armistice was signed find a ready market for the finished product at increased prices. Owners of old houses on every hand are taking profits undreamed of six months ago.

This movement is in accord with the desire of people in moderate circumstances for greater freedom, more healthful surroundings for the bringing up of children, love of outdoor exercises, boating, golfing, tennis, and the like.

It is also a fact that for the rental of a stuffy little apartment, from which one only gets a view of roofs and chimneys, he may procure an attractive cottage with every modern convenience; spacious rooms, lawns, and flower gardens.

Of late years the character and quality of suburban building has undergone a great improvement. The higher grade development companies have carefully restricted their properties against unsightly and offensive features, and have spent large sums of money in developing the artistic possibilities of the landscape.

Several years ago the late William Ziegler foresaw great possibilities in the suburban field and invested huge sums in the purchase and development of residential properties on Long Island, Staten Island, and New Jersey. These properties which up to that time had been farm lands were developed along harmonious lines and built up rapidly. During the recent depression in the realty market, however, building and selling came to a standstill temporarily.

Subsequently, these holdings came into the possession of William Ziegler, Jr., by inheritance, who, animated by a desire to relieve in part at least the present housing shortage, decided to place the properties on the market and assist those desirous of building homes by advancing the necessary funds for building.

To facilitate matters for the uninitiated in the details and intricacies of erecting a home, arrangements have been made with a building concern of national reputation to prepare plans and designs of dwellings and bungalows which will be submitted upon request from buyers for inspection. The same concern is also prepared to furnish every item of material going into the house and proceed with immediate construction.

The sale will be conducted by Bryan L. Kennelly, auctioneer, in the Vesey Street Salesroom, commencing on Saturday morning, Nov. 8, at 11 o'clock, and will continue on the following Monday and Tuesday, until every lot and house has been sold to the highest bidder without reserve.

E. Tanenbaum Corporation have leased to the Carman Supply Company, for the Wilbeth Realty Corporation, the store and basement at 141 to 145 West Seventeenth Street, containing approximately 14,000 square feet, for a long term of years.

REALTY VALUES VS. TRANSIT SERVICE

Good Transportation Is Much More Important Than Cheap Fares.

EFFECT ON OUTLYING AREAS

Transit Commissioner Delaney Says Three New Extensions Are Needed.

Lack of money to extend the rapid transit lines on routes not provided for in the dual contracts, the threatened suspension of several of the surface lines in outlying districts, and the disintegration of big railroad systems into single companies with the power of increasing the rate of fare by both the elimination of transfers and by the establishment of the zone method of charging, may result in retarding the growth of suburban areas.

Real estate dealers in Flatlands and in other sections served by the lines of the Brooklyn City Railroad Company have said that the increased fares inaugurated by the company had decreased real estate values from 15 to 25 per cent. Officials connected with the Public Service Commission and experts employed by Transit Construction Commissioner John H. Delaney agreed yesterday in saying that expensive or inadequate transportation service was always followed by a fall in real estate values and a delay in the development and improvement of idle land.

It was pointed out by others that the refusal of the City Administration to permit the transportation companies to increase the fare rate to a point sufficient to pay fixed charges would mean that the city could not hope to benefit by an increase in property values with the increase in the amount of taxes which always follows extended improvement and development.

Commissioner Delaney was asked what chance there was for an extension of rapid transit lines. He replied that it was impossible to answer such a question because the difficulty at present was the raising of sufficient money to complete the lines already under construction. He said that he saw no chance of increasing the number of track miles by new contracts for several years. He was asked if the rapid transit lines were not already ten years or more behind the demand for them and he replied that he did not believe they were more than a year behind.

Mr. Delaney expressed the opinion that there was need of three extensions to the rapid transit system, from Corona to Flushing, about two miles; from Nostrand Avenue at Flatbush to Corona, and from 242d Street, on the west side subway in this borough, to Yonkers.

But these extensions, he said, would have to wait until the situation was cleared up and money could be procured. He thought it would be impossible to obtain money at this time, or probably at any time within the next three years, for railroad purposes because investors in the present lines, forgetful of large dividends in the past, were resentful and dissatisfied because the dividends had been suspended.

"It follows naturally," said Mr. Delaney, "that the building of new homes in outlying sections will fall off when the transportation service is affected. I don't believe that the people care so much about the cost of service as they care about the adequacy of it. Give them good service and while they may grumble a bit about the cost, they will pay it and go on creating new homes. The people must get about, and in this city, where there are such magnificent distances, adequate and efficient transportation is of the utmost importance.

"Personally I have no fear that the needs of the people will be provided for in one way or another. If realty values go down that will be an inducement to invest, and so it may happen that the normal increase in taxable values will not be affected so much as some of the realty dealers fear."

Mr. Delaney said that the subject of extending the rapid transit system to Richmond was a very live subject and that in the course of time it would be taken up seriously. He thought that the cost, in this period of excessive prices, was the chief objection at present against the project.

SEPTEMBER BUILDING.

Big Increase in Value Over September, 1918.

According to reports received by Building Age, New York, direct from 187 city Building Departments, the number of permits granted for September, 1919, shows an increase in estimated value of 275 per cent. compared with September, 1918; 172 cities show increases over last year. The total estimated value of contemplated construction for the country is $142,602,510, as against $38,037,420 for September, 1918.

The number of permits granted totals 38,741 for September, 1919, as against 20,363 for September, 1918—an increase of 90 per cent., the average value per permit being $3,682, as against $185. This latter figure clearly shows the influence of war restrictions, when most of the work, outside of Government building, was necessary repairs.

Much of this large increase over last year is only apparent. Government restrictions were in effect from the last of September till Nov. 21, and this curtailment naturally witnessed a corresponding decline in building, which was, therefore, at an extremely low level.

Eastern cities show an increase of 295 per cent., seventy out of seventy-four reporting gains; Middle State cities, 336 per cent. increase, forty-six out of fifty-one reporting gains; Southern cities, 282 per cent. increase, thirty-five out of thirty-eight cities reporting gains; and Western cities, 89 per cent. increase, twenty-one out of twenty-three cities reporting gains.

As compared with August, 1919, the September total shows a decrease of 19 per cent. This is only natural, as the slack season for building is approaching.

During the past year the cost of frame dwellings has risen considerably and next Spring a further advance can be looked for. Houses costing about 30 cents per cubic foot in the vicinity of New York City in the Spring of 1919 now cost about 40 cents. Yet in spite of this advance, which is typical of all kinds of construction, the demand is so great that people simply must build, and so construction is active and will continue to be so for several years at least in spite of expected higher costs for next year.

The coal strike, if won, will have considerable effect on the building situation. Soft coal, which is at present more than a third cheaper than anthracite, will, of course, advance considerably, if the strike is won, thus forcing up the prices of all commodities depending on coal for their manufacture, and not the least of these will be building materials. Furthermore, freight rates will quite likely be raised to meet the new cost of fuel, and a higher price level all along the line may be looked for.

Broadway Lease.

Winship, Boit & Co. leased from Charles Vinn & Co. and the John M. Dodd estate the building at 893 Broadway, containing 25,000 square feet, for a long term at a figure close to $190,000. Pease & Elliman were the brokers.

I am 21 years old with high school and business college training. I am ambitious, energetic and thorough. My friends have faith in my ability to "make good";

BUT

I have served a term in prison, and am now on probation. I am looking for a position that will pay me a living wage to start, with the opportunity to advance on my own proven merit. All I ask is a chance to forget the past and look forward to a brighter, better, more useful future.

LOOK TO THE FUTURE.

A wonderful future stretches before this great city of New York; more and more commerce will centre here, more and larger ships will enter our harbors; more and swifter trains will rush in and out of our stations; more business, involving bigger affairs than ever before, will be transacted in our buildings.

By its very nature, the telephone business must increase as the city develops; as industry grows and expands, its demands for telephone service grow larger and more exacting; it is the duty and privilege of the Telephone Company to anticipate and meet these demands.

There are wonderful opportunities right now in telephone operating; girls and young women are needed to handle the present enormous telephone traffic; these young women will rise to higher positions with greater responsibility and higher salary as the increasing demand for telephone service creates new opportunities in the telephone business; the junior operator of today is the supervisor, assistant Chief Operator and Chief Operator of tomorrow.

Girls 16 to 23 are wanted for for Telephone Operating.

BOY.
There's a certain boy in New York, and we want him! He doesn't watch the clock; he wants to start at the beginning to train and study for a man's job, and wants to grow with the organization which employs him. He fears God and takes his own part, and uses his head and brains as they were intended to be used. When we find this boy, we want him in our office. We'll train him and help him grow, and his advancement will be limited only by his own valuation of his services to the organization. But he MUST begin at the bottom.
Are YOU the boy we're after? If you think so, write us today, giving particulars as to age, education and experience, M 366 Times.

SALESMEN!

One of our managers said to me the other day:

"When I applied for position as salesman with our company I had never had any selling experience. I had been a draftsman in an architect's office at a salary of $22 per week. I was convinced by the manager that I could sell under your system; I resigned my position as draftsman and became a salesman. I received a commission check for my first week's work amounting to $60. The second week my commission check was in excess of $100, and in three months to a day from the date of my employment I was promoted to manager of one of the company's offices. My first week's check as manager was $350."

Have you the vision to see opportunity in such a connection? If so, write for interview. We are one of the largest security selling concerns in America. L 291 Times.

SALESMAN, SUPPOSE

you know something about office specialty salesmanship, and yet regarded yourself as more advertising man than salesman; and suppose New York City had more waiting business than two men can now handle, so that two more men will be let in on it Nov. 1st; and suppose it didn't matter how young you were, that you would be ruled out if you were over 35; and suppose the appliance you would sell were already in demand, an accepted though revolutionary device, in successful continuous use by the foremost business concerns; and suppose it were to be consistently and strongly advertised; and suppose you only had to do one-half as well as the writer in order to make commissions of $100 a week—and the better you do the better I shall be pleased—would you write and give me a line on your belief in yourself before I ask you to call? I can then tell in three minutes whether you can qualify as one of the two men. K 91 Times.

DIVISION MANAGERS WANTED. WHAT IS DESTINED TO BE ONE OF THE GREATEST MANAGERIAL ORGANIZATIONS IN AMERICA OFFERS YOU AN OPPORTUNITY TO ENTER ITS RANKS.

The LIBERTY STARTERS' CORPORATION, entering the airplane and automobile industries, is building an INTERNATIONAL SELLING ORGANIZATION. FIFTY DIVISION MANAGERS are needed to build a domestic force, and about five foreign representatives to handle the overseas markets.

The plan is unique in every way. The problem of the day is a man problem; men who CAN do can be found any time, men who WILL do, seldom.

We want no man working FOR us, we want men working WITH us. So, with the central idea of developing a real managerial staff, thirty days ago we started our training course, along with our financial campaign, and the results so far have been astounding.

Our managers are making big commissions in the sale of our securities and taking their training in the merchandising of our products at the same time; so, as you see, our staff is making this business possible—it is THEIR business.

Come around to 620 TODAY and see for yourself the results we have obtained, and the opportunity we offer YOU. It will take but a few moments of your time, and it may mean a revolution of your future.

SALESMEN OF ADVERTISING.

One of the largest daily newspapers in New York is publishing a book to be placed in the hands of every woman furnishing a new home. Limited amount of advertising will be sold on unique basis to retail stores and national manufacturers whose product has been tested and endorsed by this newspaper.

This book will be a permanent feature, and the advertising plan is so novel and attractive that it practically sells itself when properly explained—rate so low as to be most inviting to any advertiser who wants to reach the housewife when she has money to spend in equipping a home.

There is an opening now for several high-grade advertising salesmen to handle the space in this publication. They must be men who know the field thoroughly, have entre to the larger agencies, enjoy the acquaintance of large retail and national advertisers. They must have an actual record for producing results that is unquestioned.

To such men will be offered a substantial drawing account from the start, with liberal commission arrangement payable in full when contracts are signed and copy delivered. Men must be of the highest type and capable of earning from $7,500 to $10,000.

If you have these qualifications and want to get in at the start of a permanent proposition of almost limitless future, we invite your application, stating fully your experience, age, past earning record and where you can be reached by telephone, if possible.

ADDRESS A. H., BOX 373 TIMES.

INDUSTRIAL OPPORTUNITIES.

TODAY IS THE AGE OF EFFICIENCY.

Everywhere we hear the cry for increased production and reduced costs. The industrial waste in the United States is estimated by efficiency experts to amount to over $50,000,000 per day, most of which is due to lack of training of executives and lack of coordination.

Manufacturers are clamoring for men who can produce results, and the call for men with a knowledge of factory management is growing greater every day. The requirements for the men who enter this field call for a sound knowledge of the principles of organization, operation, production, and the relationship between employer and employee.

$5,000 TO $100,000.

Men trained in the science of factory management command salaries from $5,000 to $100,000 a year.

A knowledge of these principles opens up opportunities, not only for independent practice, but for high-salaried industrial positions.

STUDY AT HOME.

The Industrial Extension Institute provides an organized course of home study and training in "Factory Management." This is the first and only course of its kind which has ever been offered, and which is being used by such organizations as the General Electric Company, National Conduit and Cable Company, General Motors Corporation, and many others as a means of training their men for the "bigger job."

If you are awake to the new opportunities which are open to you in this profession of Industrial Engineering, a postcard addressed to the Institute will bring you detailed information as to the Factory Management Course and Service and a free 100-page booklet entitled "Thinking Beyond Your Job."

ACCOUNTING.
Cost C. P. A. Executive.
WHY STAY IN A RUT?

If you are like the majority of office workers who find themselves financially handicapped at the present time you will welcome an opportunity to add to your business ability and income without interfering in the slightest with your present employment.

SELF-BETTERMENT PROGRAM.

The oldest and most successful advanced accounting school in the country will make it possible for you to qualify as a specialist through its new elective system. This training is intensely interesting, and is designed to meet the need of those who desire a maximum benefit in a minimum of time expenditure. No previous bookkeeping or accounting experience is necessary.

UNLIMITED DEMAND.

Trained accountants find a ready market for their services at salaries ranging from $1,500 to $5,000 a year, and the "Journal of Accountancy" recently stated that the average annual income of American public accountants is in excess of $3,000. Many accounting experts earn from $10,000 to $15,000 a year and up.

PERSONAL ATTENTION.

The I. A. S. elective course is elastic at both ends, and while professional in character, it is simple enough so that the average business man can make surprisingly rapid progress in mastering the lessons. You can make your future what you will through the use of your spare time just as thousands of others have done since 1903. For particulars call, 'phone or write, giving business address. Accepted applicants guaranteed satisfaction, low tuition. Easy terms.

Accountancy taught by our method is more desirable than class room instruction. Our book, "How to Learn Accounting," tells explicitly why this is so, and also describes just how the International Accountants Society teaches men and women to excel in the accountancy profession.

This subject is of vital interest to any one who would like to get out of a rut and associate himself with a profession that offers untold opportunities. Arrange for an interview at once. Call, write or phone.

TO $500 UP MONTHLY.

An unusual opportunity is offered responsible, conscientious men, 22 to 48, now employed, with proven record, but limited chances for advancement, in traffic management and interstate commerce work.

THOUSANDS OF MEN NEEDED.

Increasing production, following the world's greatest war, and coming foreign trade make advancement easy. New merchant marine will make Uncle Sam the largest shipper on earth. MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WASTED.

Men must be found to direct packing, loading, rating, tracing, and delivering shipments under Government regulation. Millions of dollars are wasted annually. Competent men save thousands of dollars, paying their salaries, and increasing profits. One man saved $9,751 on 86 cars in two weeks. Experience is not necessary if willing to master shipping detail through co-operation of about 200 traffic experts. This practical plan provides actual experience training until the required standard of efficiency has been attained. The work is remarkably easy and may be done at home with no interference with present occupation. Cash in your wasted time now for a big future salary.
